A BRIEF ACCOUNT OF SOME FINDING AIDS IN THE BRITISH NATIONAL ARCHIVES LONDON, ENGLAND (1)

ROYALTY

Compiled by Virginia M. Meyer (Mrs. Harold I.)

Before the Public Record Office, London[2], England, was created in 1838, the official publication of records was a project of the British Record Society (appointed in 1800) and the State Paper Commission (appointed in 1825) and "also by special (3) enterprises such as the 18th-century edition of the Rolls of Parliament and Domesday Book."

When the Public Record Office Act was passed, the Master of Rolls was granted authority to print calendars, catalogues, and indexes, of records and documents in his custody.

There are six forms of official publications of original documents and manuscripts, which are useful to the researcher:

1. Transcript: A full text of the original manuscript in abbreviated form, wherever this could be done with certainty.
2. Calendar: usually in English, with content data complete enough to be successfully used by a researcher.
3. List: descriptive accounts of the units comprising a given class of public records.
4. Descriptive List: a brief but very useful abstract of documents.
5. Index: An alphabetically arranged references to assist the researcher in his efforts to find individuals, places and subject materials in the official records.
6. Catalogue: a descriptive list or calendar, whose similar content is drawn from different group or class in the Public Record Office. (PRO).

The researcher will need to be aware of the fact that English records and documents are entered (precise time) under the various reigns of Kings and Queens:

William I	1066-1087
William II	1087-1100
Henry I	1100-1135

possibility that two Roberts had been combined into one, and that the Robert Wingfield named as son of Sir Henry Wingfield was not the Robert Wingfield who died in 1575/6.

In attempting to resolve this problem, I reviewed a number of published pedigrees of the Wingfields, including: Sir Henry Ellis, ed., Visitation of Huntingdon, 1613, Camden Society, Old Series 43(1849):128; Visitation of Rutland 1618-19, Harleian Soc. Pub., Visitations 3(London 1870):32; Walter C. Metcalfe, ed., Visitations of Northamptonshire, 1564 and 1618-19 (London 1887) p. 204 (appendix); E.M. Deming, "Pedigree of Wingfield," Suffolk Institute of Archaeology and Natural History 7(1891):57-67; and Burke's Landed Gentry, 17th ed. (London 1952) pp. 2762-63. All of these listed the Robert who died 1575/6 as son of Sir Henry Wingfield. But none of the visitations can be considered strictly a contemporary source, while the secondary sources do not include full citations.

A search through the various calendars of documents published by the Public Record Office (hereafter PRO), the wills of Sir Henry and Robert Wingfield and the Inquisition Post Mortem (hereafter Inq. PM) of Robert (copy obtained from PRO) did not provide evidence that would conclusively solve the problem. Therefore, in what usually should be taken only as a last step when dealing with a gentry line, I wrote to the College of Arms to see if the records there included anything that would help in the solution. This effort proved successful and I received a transcript of a funeral certificate, executed by Robert's son in 1576, wherein he stated that his father was son of Sir Henry Wingfield. This then was solid contemporary proof of Robert's parentage and, as will be shown, the apparent chronological problem was caused by (1) Sir Henry's birth when his mother was close to forty, (2) the birth of Henry's son Robert by a second marriage when he was about fifty, and (3) the relatively great age for the period attained by this son.

DESCENT FROM EDWARD I

In the following lineage of James Claypoole from Edward I, the initial generations are based on entries from The Complete Peerage, which cites primary sources (G.E. Cokayne, ed., new ed. [London 1910-59], hereafter New CP). For the later generations, contemporary sources have been cited to prove each link. The brief biographies are included to illustrate the transition in roles and status as the line passes from the king through the higher nobility to the knightly class, and then through the landed gentry to the Quaker merchant, James Claypoole.

She was one of the richest widows in England, with lands in the counties of York, Lincoln, Warwick, Leicester, Northampton, Rutland, Bedford, Buckingham, Sussex, Norfolk, Nottingham, Cambridge, Huntingdon, Salop, and Derby and in the march of Wales.

Upon promising to pay a fine of 2000 marks to the king, she was pardoned on 28 Sept. 1401 for the marriage and her lands were restored to her (Calendar of the Patent Rolls [London 1891-], hereafter Cal. Pat. Rolls, 1399-1401 pp. 544-45). Subsequent to his marriage, Robert de Goushill was knighted and received control of his wife's dower. 6 ELIZABETH GOUSHILL b. ca.1402 (based on her age in her father's Inq. P.M.), living Oct. 1452 (when named in husband's will); m. Sir ROBERT WINGFIELD of Letheringham, co. Suffolk, who died between 6 Oct. 1452 and 21 Nov. 1454. Their marriage was entered in the Visitation of Suffolk taken in 1561 as "Sir Robert Wingfeld. . . maryed Elizabeth Daughtr and heyr of Robert Gowsell & of Elizabeth his wyfe Daughtr and one of theyres of Rychard erll of arondell. . . ." (Joan Corder, ed., The Visitation of Suffolk, 1561, Harleian Soc. Pub., New Series 2-3, 2 vols. [London 1981-84], hereafter Vis. Suff. 1561, 2:212, 215). A brass effigy formerly in Letheringham church confirms this identification. It shows the arms of Wingfield impaling Goushill and bears the inscription "Her lieth S'r Thomas Wingfeld, knyght, Richard Wyngfeld and William Wyngfeld, squyres, sonns of S'r Rob't Wyngfeld, knyght, and of lady Elizabeth his wif, syster to the duke of Norff" (Vis. Suff. 1561 2:216). Elizabeth Goushill's half brother, by her mother's second husband, was John Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk (New CP 9:605-7). The brass would date to a period not long after 1510 when the last two of the three brothers died.

Sir Robert Wingfeld served as M.P. for Suffolk 1427/8 and attended the Duke of Norfolk on his embassy to France in 1447 (John M. Wingfield, Some Records of the Wingfield Family [London 1925], hereafter Wingfield Recs., pp. 7-17; Vis. Suff. 1561 2:215). Robert's will, made at Cambridge 6 Oct. 1452, was proved 21 Nov. 1454. He mentioned his wife Elizabeth, his sons John, Thomas, William, and Henry, and his daughters Elizabeth, Anne, and Katherine (Vis. Suff. 1561 2:215, citing Prerogative Court of Canterbury, hereafter PCC, 1 Stokton). Their son:

7 Sir HENRY WINGFIELD was under eighteen when named in his father's will in 1452. As one of his parents' younger children, he was probably b. bet. 1435 and 1440. He was named as fifth son of Sir Robert Wingfield and his wife Elizabeth in the 1561 Visitation of Suffolk (Vis. Suff. 1561 2:212). He was knighted at the battle of Tewksbury in 1471 and was for many years Governor of Orford Castle, co. Suffolk. He m. (1) bef. 1470 ALICE, widow of George Seckford, and almost certainly daughter of John HARTE. He m. (2) ELIZABETH ROKES, daughter of a Rokes (variously called Sir Robert or Thomas) of Fawely, co. Bucks. (Vis. Suff. 1561 2:216; Wingfield Recs. pp. 23-25). He was called Sir Henry Wyngfeld, of Orford, Knt., in his will, dated 21 Feb. 1493/4 and proved 6 May 1494. He asked to be buried in the church of the Austin Friars of Orford. He bequeathed 400 sheep to his wife Elizabeth, of which 100 each were to go to his sons Thomas and Robert upon the age of 21. He made various other bequests and asked that 600 sheep "be sold to my nephew Robert Wyngfeld" to pay for prayers for his and his relatives' souls (Robert Wingfield, son of his eldest brother Sir John, later knighted. See Vis. Suff. 1561 2:217-18). He also left his wife a house with appurtenances and all his purchased land in Shottisham, which were to go at her death to his son Robert (H.W.B. Wayman, ed., Suffolk Wills [Orford], Prerogative Court of Canterbury 1383-1800 [London 1915] pp. 1-2, detailed abstract of the will, PCC 10 Vox). He was probably over forty when he married his second wife, Elizabeth, the mother of his two sons. She was buried in the chancel at Westhorpe, co. Suffolk, with the inscription "Orate Pro Animae Elizabethae Wyngefeld Uxoris Henrici Wyngefeld Militis" (Wingfield Recs. p. 23). The elder son, Thomas Wingfield, served in various government offices in co. Kent between 1515 and 1547, when last named in the records (Letters and Papers. . . of Henry VIII, 23 vols. in 38 [London 1862-1932], hereafter Let. & Pap. Hen. VIII, 2 Pt. 1:71, 21 Pt. 2:445; Wingfield Fam. p. 35). No record of any marriage or of a will for Thomas Wingfield was located. Henry's son by his second wife:

8 ROBERT WINGFIELD of Upton, co. Northampton, may have been born as late as 1490, when his father was about fifty. As he died in 1576, he would then have been over eighty-five, an uncommon but not unique age for the period. He is consistently named as son of Sir Henry Wingfield in the records of Visitations from the early 1600s. Direct primary evidence for his parentage comes from his funeral certificate, part of the official records of the College of Arms and executed 24 Feb. 1575/6 by his son, which states that he was "second son of Sir Henry Wingfield of Orford in the county of Suffolk, Knight."

As noted earlier, Robert son of Henry has been confused in a number of secondary sources with his cousin, Sir Robert Wingfield (ca.1464-1539), who was at the Field of the Cloth of Gold in 1520 (for whom see DNB 21:662-64; Wingfield Recs. pp. 38-139; and Vis. Suff. 1561 2:217-18). But as Sir Robert was from 1510 on described as a knight, the two can be clearly differentiated in the records (Wingfield Recs. p. 41). Like his elder brother, Robert son of Henry entered royal service and in 1519 the king granted to "our beloved" Robert Wyngfeld a twenty-one year lease of the manor of Brodeton (Browton), co. Wilts. (PRO C 66/632; Let. & Pap. Hen. VIII 3 Pt. 1:32, 6:191). In 1535 he was named a government auditor in co. Leicester and in 1540 was named to a commission of gaol delivery for Peterborough, co. Northampton (Let. & Pap. Hen. VIII 8:350, 16:51).

On 12 July 1543, he was described as the King's servant, when he received a grant in fee for £252 of the manor of Upton and Aylesworth, co. Northampton, which had belonged to the late Queen Jane, with appurtenances and tenements in Upton, Aylesworth, and Ufford. Also included were lands and woods in Upton and Allerton Nabbe, Castor Parish, as well as other lands in the parishes of Ufford, Sutton, and Etton, all in co. Northampton (Let. & Pap. Hen. VIII 18 Pt. 1:540). His years of government service finally had gained him the means to establish a new family seat, which he did at Upton. Robert Wingfield remained active into his old age. As Robert Wingfeld the elder, he was on a 1564 commission of sewers [to ensure repair of dikes and channels to prevent flooding] in co. Lincoln along with his son, Robert Wingfeld, designated the younger. In 1567, with his son Robert and his son's wife Elizabeth, he agreed to alienate Layham manor in co. Suffolk. His last active role was in 1570, when about the age of eighty, he was again named to serve on a commission of sewers (Cal. Pat. Rolls 1563-66 p. 40; 1566-69 p. 116; 1569-72 p. 221).

Based on the age of his eldest son (who, as known from his Inq. P.M. below, was over 44 in 1576), Robert Wingfield married about 1530. He would have been about forty at the time. His wife was MARGERY QUARLES, daughter of John Quarles of co. Norfolk (see Robert's funeral certificate below). Margery died before her husband and was buried in the church of Ufford. Robert's will was dated 4 June 1575 (not 14 June 1574 as at Wingfield Fam. p. 3) and proved 6 July 1576 (PCC 19 Carew). He described himself as Robert Wingfelde of Upton, esquire, and asked to be buried in the church of Ufford where his late wife lay buried or elsewhere as convenient. (As learned from his funeral certificate, he was buried in the church of Castor.)

He bequeathed to his eldest son and heir, Robert Wingfield, the manors of Upton and Aylesworth, co. Northampton, "Wingfeilde" house in London, and the manors of Kersey and "Shattisham," co. Suffolk. (He had been bequeathed Shottisham manor by his father's will.) His bequests to his second son John included the manor of Little Bittringe (or Bittering), co. Norfolk. He made a number of bequests of cash and sheep to his sons and grandchildren, including 100 marks each to Elizabeth and Dorothy, daughters of his son Robert, at their marriages or at eighteen. He gave to "my Sister Mrs Jane Cicill one old Royall" (she was mother-in-law of his son Robert). He appointed his son Robert Wingfield executor and Sir William Cecil, Knight, Lord Burleigh, High Treasurer of England, supervisor.

His funeral certificate, which was critical in providing proof as to his father, is an example of a source from the official records at the College of Arms which can supply important information not always included in the Visitation records there. It was transcribed (with spelling and punctuation modernized) by P.L. Dickinson, Richmond Herald:

> Robert Wingfield of Upton in the county of Northampton, esquire, second son of Sir Henry Wingfield of Orford in the county of Suffolk, Knight, died at his house of Upton the fourth day of February Ao. Dm. 1575[/6] and from thence he was carried to his parish church of Castor in the said county the xxiiith day of the said month & there was buried. The said Robert married Margery, daughter of John Quarles of Norfolk, and by her had issue Robert Wingfield, his son and heir and only executor, John 2 & Elizabeth. The said Robert married Elizabeth, the second daughter to Richard Cecil of Burghley in the county of Northampton, esquire, and by her had issue Robert, his first son, John, second son, Cecil, 3 son, Richard, 4 son, Elizabeth and Dorothy. John Wingfield of Wittering [sic], the 2 son of Robert son of Sir Henry Wingfield, married Anne, daughter and one of the heirs of John Callybut of the county of Norfolk, esquire, & by her had issue Charles and Anthony. Elizabeth sister of the said John married to Robert Samson of Kersey in the county of Suffolk, esquire. The overseer of the last will and testament of Robert Wingfield deceased was the Right Honourable William Cecil, Baron of Burghley, High Treasurer of England. The Officer of Arms that served there was E. Knight, Chester Herald. In Witness hereof the executor abovesaid hath set to his hand the xxiiiith of February 1575[/6].

His Inq. P.M. was taken 7 Sept. 1576 and described him as Robert Wingfeld, esquire (PRO WARD 7/18 f. 57). It listed his co. Northampton property and income including his manors and lands in Upton, Aylesworth, Helpeston, Etton, Woodcroft, Castor, Sutton, and Ufford. The property agreement he had made with Jane Cecil, widow, formerly wife of Richard Cecil, esquire, 21 Sept. 1555, was described. (This would have been in connection with his son's marriage to Jane's daughter.) His death date was given as 4 Feb. 1575/6, and his son and heir, Robert Wingfield, was aged forty-four years and more. Preface

Good tourists going to England undertake to read a book about the kings and queens. These books are of two kinds. One kind begins with William the Conqueror, and tourists wander pitifully around Westminster Abbey thumbing it for Edward the Confessor. The other kind begins back with the earliest Rex totius Anglorum patriae, King Offa (d. 796), and about the time tourists get to King Harold Harefoot (d. 1040) they lose their courage and read no more.

So this book begins at neither of those points back in time, but now.

Please try the English kings and queens this different way, reading backwards from now. If you find yourself disliking the device you need not use it. Start again, with the last chapter instead of the first, and read chronologically.

But to go backwards in time is, really, the normal way. We all look at continuing history from where we stand ourselves. We say: "My grandfather's name was John. He was the son of Robert, who settled in this town. Robert's father was named Thomas; he came from England. . . ."

So in this book we begin with Queen Elizabeth II, who "succeeded to the throne upon the death of her father, George VI. . . . He succeeded . . . upon the abdication of his brother, Edward VIII. . . ."

And we go back not even a thousand years—beyond the Conqueror, necessarily, but only as far as the Confessor, the first king to be buried in Westminster Abbey, the last of the old English line.

It is too bad not to go a century or so beyond him, back to Alfred the Great (d. 900). Alfred bears a familiar, expected name. But to reach this landmark king who codified the laws, beat back the Danes, and burned the cakes, we plod through barren country—not only Harold Harefoot and Canute but Edmund Ironside, Ethelred the Unready,

THE DESCENT OF THE PLANTAGENET KINGS FROM THE HOLY ROMAN EMPERORS

By G. Andrews Moriarty, A.M., LLB., F.A.S.G., F.S.A.

Communicated by the Committee on English and Foreign Research

Among the rulers of the Middle Ages the German Kings, who were also the Holy Roman Emperors occupied, in the mediaeval political theory of society, a place apart and above all others. In theory, and at times actually, the Holy Emperors stood at the apex of mediaeval Europe; consequently the descent of the English Kings of the House of Anjou and of their descendants from the "Semper Augusti" is of considerable interest.

When the Western Roman Empire fell, after the long duel which it had waged for three centuries with the German tribes upon the Danube and the Rhine; as the result of a combination of social, political, and economic ills within the Empire, and the barbarian mercenary leader Odoacer deposed the puppet Emperor Romulus Augustulus in the year 476 and sent the imperial insignia to the Eastern Emperor at Constantinople, we know that, in the west at least, the old Empire had at last come to an end. To the men of those days and for many centuries thereafter, however, it seemed the Empire had not ended but that it was merely suspended.

In the confusion, disintegration, and anarchy that ensued in the succeeding centuries, while the German conquerors and the conquered Roman Provincials were slowly amalgamating to form the nations of modern Europe, men forgot the terrible evils of the old Empire and remembered only its well ordered government and laws and came to look back upon it as a sort of Golden Age. Towards the close of the eighth century one of the conquering German tribes — the Franks — had obtained a dominion which approximated that of the old Western Empire, for they ruled, not only their ancestral home in North Western Germany and Flanders, but also all Gaul, the modern France, to which they have given their name, Western and South Western Germany and Italy as far south as Benevento. At this time there arose among the Franks a great ruler of extraordinary ability for consolidation and administration, so that it seemed time for him to re-establish once more the old Roman Empire of the West. The genius of this man, the great central figure of the Middle Ages, whom men call Karl der Grosse, Charlemagne, Charles the Great or Carlo Magno, succeeded for a time in holding in check the forces making for separation, which were destined to end in creating the new nationalities of Europe, and in welding the peoples together for a short time into an administrative whole. But the forces of disintegration and separation were too strong and at his death they reasserted themselves with redoubled force, so that by the commencement of the tenth century the nadir of civilization appeared to have been reached and the Emperors, who succeeded him, were but pale ghosts of his departed power. Had the dream of Charles been made good the whole course of history from that day to the present moment would have been changed and both our fathers and ourselves would have been spared unutterable woes. For he strove to form the diverse peoples of Europe into one great pacific Empire, bound together by the common bond of the Christian religion, an empire which would have presented an united front to the outer world of Asiatic barbarism. Although the dream of Charles failed, its concept remained for centuries thereafter, down to the Renaissance, the guiding theory of mediaeval political thought. According to that theory an united Christendom was to be ruled by two supreme heads, the Emperors, who were supreme and above all national Kings in matters temporal and the Pope, who was to play a like role in affairs spiritual. At various times in the succeeding centuries there arose great German rulers, who seemed destined to fulfill the dream of the Great Emperor, but in the end the forces of separate nationalism triumphed and Europe was divided into waring and hostile nations destined, as it seems, at last to destroy themselves and to make way for the horrors of an Asiatic despotism.

In the midst of the anarchy of the tenth century there arose at last in Germany a great ruler in the person of Otto the Great of the Saxon house of the Ludolphings who succeeded, to some extent, in reasserting the Imperial authority and in re-establishing, for the moment, some semblence of order in Germany and Italy. In Gaul, however, the process of amalgamation between the Germans and the Gallo-Romans had proceeded so far during the ninth century, that a feeling of distinct nationalism was beginning to be felt, which precluded the inclusion of that country in the rejuvenated Empire.

The theory of the separation of the Supreme Power between the Emperor and the Pope carried in it the seeds of a conflict fatal, unfortunately for us all, to the mediaeval political theory. The feudal system, which had grown up as a measure of self defense in the evil days of confusion and anarchy in the ninth and tenth centuries brought about an overlapping of the fields of the spiritual and temporal power and the Emperors and the Popes tore themselves to pieces in a desperate and inevitable conflict, which, in the thirteenth century ended with the utter ruin of the Empire and in a fatal weakening of the Papal power. From this disaster the world has suffered ever since, never more than at the present hour.

During the three hundred years, which elapsed from the time of Otto the Great to the final ruin of the Empire on the death of the great Hohenstaufen Emperor Frederick II in 1250, Germany furnished some of the greatest rulers of the Middle Ages; Otto the Great, Otto II, his son, and Henry III, der Schwartze, of the Franconian house of the Conradins and the great Hohenstaufen Em-perors, Fredrick Barbarossa and his still greater grandson, the strange and enigmatical, Frederick II were, in their time, the most powerful rulers of Europe. When the power of the Empire ended on the death of Frederick II (1250), the empty shell still lingered on and, for six hundred years, Europe saw a long line of phantom Emperors, which came at last to an end in 1806, during the Napoleonic upheaval. The legacy left by the old Emperors, in their struggle for European unity, was a fatal one for both Germany and Italy; for, while striving for that unity they destroyed the forces making for a national consolidation in both these countries and it was only within the memories of persons yet living that they attained the national solidarity, which had been realized many centuries before in other Western European nations.

This very brief sketch will serve to show the supreme position accorded in the Middle Ages to the Holy Roman Emperors and should make the descent of the English Kings and of their descendants from "Semper Angusti" one of some interest.

The Plantagenet Kings have three separate descents from the Emperors. One through Eleanor of Provence, wife of Henry III, from the Saxon house of the Ludolphings; another from the same house through Isabel of France, wife of Edward II; and a third one, also through Isabel, from the Franconian house of the Conradins and the Swabian house of Hohenstaufen.

The first two lines descend as follows:

I. Ludolph Duke of Saxony. Died 866. Married Oda, daughter of Billung of Thuringia.

II. Otto the Illustrious, Duke of Saxony. Died 912. Married Hedwig.

III. Heinrich Der Vogler, King of Germany. Died 936. Married (2) in 907 Mathilda, daughter of Dietrich, Count of Ringleheim, a descendant of the Saxon hero Wittikind.

IV. Otto Der Grosse, Emperor of the West. Died 973. Married (2) in 951 Adelheid, daughter of Rudolph, King of Burgundy and widow of Lothair, King of Italy. She died in 999.

V. Otto II Emperor of the West. Born in 955. Died 983. Married (2) in 972 Theophano, daughter of Romanus II, Emperor of the East of the Imperial House of the Basilides, descended from Basil the Macedonian.

VI. Mathilda of Saxony. Died 1024. Sister of Otto III, "Stupor Mundi", Emperior of the West, who died s.p. in 1002. Married Edzo, Count Palatine of Lorraine, who died in 1034.

VII. Rixa, married in 1013 Miesco II, King of Poland, who died in 1034. From this marriage descend the only known descendants of Otto II.

THE LAST OF THE PLANTAGENETS

By Reverend Dom William W. Bayne, O.S.B., F.A.S.
Principal Heraldic Advisor to the Society

Even today in the British peerage there is one family which can claim direct male descent from King Edward III, but this descent is through two persons of illegitimate birth. Henry Beaufort, Duke of Somerset (d. 1464), grandson of John Beaufort, natural son of John of Gaunt, left at his death an illegitimate son who assumed the name of Somerset. From this person is descended the noble family of Somerset, of which the head is the Duke of Beaufort.

The last legitimate descendant of the Plantagenets was Blessed Margaret Pole, daughter of that Duke of Clarence who was put to death for treason by his brother King Edward IV, in 1477. This admirable woman was cradled in tragedy, and by tragedy was pursued until at the age of nearly seventy she laid her head upon the block, and passed to her reward.

Margaret's brother, Edward, although debarred from succession to his father's dukedom of Clarence, was given the earldom of Warwick, his mother's inheritance. On the accession of the usurper Henry Tudor, who styled himself "Henry VII", he was confined in the Tower where he remained until 1499, when in order to get rid of him he was encouraged to attempt escape, was caught and beheaded. His sister was given in marriage by the usurper to a Buckinghamshire gentleman of comparative obscurity, Sir Richard Pole. In 1505 Pole died leaving her with five children.

Henry VIII succeeded his father in 1509, and in compliance with a dying injunction of the usurper, who on his deathbed wished to make reparation for the judicial murder of the young Earl of Warwick, created the widowed Margaret Pole, Countess of Salisbury, and restored to her the lands of the earldom which had belonged to her maternal grandfather. As Countess of Salisbury, Margaret was now received into favour at Court and was appointed governess to the Princess Mary.

All went well until the question of Henry's divorce from Catherine of Aragon loomed ominously upon the horizon. As devout adherents to the ancient faith, the Countess of Salisbury and her family could not in conscience support the divorce nor the Act of Supremacy by which the primacy of the Pope was repudiated. The Poles fell into disfavour, and became increasingly objects of Henry's suspicion. The Countess's eldest son, Lord Montagu was "convicted of treason", in 1539, and beheaded. His young son, imprisoned with his father "disappeared."

Lord Montagu's brother, Reginald, pursuing his scholarly activities on the Continent: although repeatedly coaxed to return to England, refused to be lured into Henry's net. Henry was beside himself with fury when Pole wrote a book against the divorce and the Act of Supremacy, and was given a cardinal's hat by the Pope.

The Countess of Salisbury was now living discreetly in retirement, but her very presence and her staunch adherence to her conscientious scruples were a perennial source of exasperation to the tyrant. In 1541 she was condemned, unheard, by an act of attainder and beheaded on Tower Hill, a martyr to her convictions.

QUEEN ELIZABETH II, GODIVA LINKED:

"The Queen is related to a host of exotic figures in history, but whoever thought Lady Godiva would turn up among her ancestors? The 11th-century countess, who scandalized Coventry by riding through the city clad only in her long tresses, is mentioned as a forebear of Elizabeth II by no less an authority than Debrett's Peerage, Britain's oldest established blue-book of blue-bloods, which published its 164th edition recently.

In a special article to commemorate the 900th anniversary of the 1066 Norman conquest, Debrett's for the first time shows how the Queen is descended from the vanquished King Harold as well as giving the well-known descent from William the Conqueror. Harold's daughter Gytha married a Prince of Kiev, ancestor of the Russian czars, and this line linked up again with the English crown at the time of Edward III. The link with Lady Godiva and her husband, Earl Leofric, comes through a granddaughter who married King Harold...."

COMMENT: Not having been able to consult a current copy of Debrett I would appreciate very much if any reader of the A.S.I.B. can throw some light on the descent mentioned in the above press release. As reported in the press the descent appears quite credible - King Harold married a granddaughter of Lady Godiva, his daughter Gytha married a Prince of Kiev, a descendant of whom married into the English royal family at the time of King Edward III.

It is true that King Harold's daughter married, depending on which source is consulted, Yaroslav, Grand Duke of Kiev or Vladimir of Novgorod. Their descendant, Anne, married King Henry I of France, and a later French princess Isabella, married King Edward II, father of King Edward III.

This descent from Lady Godiva would add an interesting ancestress to countless family trees. Anyone who can trace his or her descent from King Edward III or any of his numerous descendants, (there are some 100,000 persons living today who can trace a legitimate descent from Edward III) could extend his family tree back to this famous horsewoman - IF - the descent can be established.

King Harold did in fact marry Ealdyth (Edith) daughter of Alfgar, Earl of Mercia, son of Leofric, Earl of Mercia and Lady Godiva. Harold's daughter Gytha was born to Eadgyth Swanneshals (Edith of the Swan Neck), variously described as his wife or mistress. Whatever her marital status she was not the Edith who was the granddaughter of Lady Godiva.

Dear Sir,

For several months I have been an interested reader of your excellent publication. As an American citizen, an European noble, and a Knight of several European Orders of Chivalry, the various comments which I have read concerning a possible Heralds College interest me.

It is a well known fact that it is still possible for American citizens to obtain grants of Arms from certain European nations, especially from Ireland, England, Scotland, and Spain. As I understand it, many of these grants from England are "honorary", while those from Ireland, Scotland and Spain are not. I also understand that American citizens of German ancestry may obtain what most probably should be called "registrations" of Arms from Germany.

Naturally, it is a good idea to obtain a grant from an existing College of Arms, if that is possible, but why in the world shouldn't American citizens adopt Arms for themselves, if they so wish? There is certainly no law against it, and such "adopted" Arms are as "valid" in America as Arms "purchased" from an European Herald!

I see no reason why such a worth-while organization as The Augustan Society should not act as a "registry" for such assumed Arms. No doubt the Society has a number of erudite gentlemen who could and would research Arms presented for registration, and could thus insure that the new Coat would follow accepted heraldic rules and standards, and would not infringe on the rights of any other gentleman or family.

Of course I know that this is a rather far-out idea, to use an expression which is perhaps better known to the youth of America than to readers of your Bulletin. But after all, America declared its Independence on 4th July 1776 - what is all this business of having to send money to Europe to "purchase" a Coat of Arms?

If The Augustan Society really wants to make a contribution to the world of heraldry, why not set up a College and become "the authority" on such matters in the Americas? What are you waiting for?

To get matters started, please find enclosed a monetary contribution to help set up the College.

Sincerely,
D. F. Monte Tauro,
Vienna, Austria

THE UNCLES

John H. Nicholls

By the latter part of the 14th century, the Hundred Years' War between England and France had settled into a lull. The great English victories of Crecy in 1347 and Poitiers in 1336 had destroyed the chivalry of France, but, one by one, the English generals had died and no one had stepped in to replace them. In the 20-odd years at which we are now going to look, the English made several unsuccessful invasions of France and the French staged an invasion of Englahd which was aborted. For most of the period a series of truces were, more or less, in effect.

In each country, by a strange coincidence, there was a young King with three uncles of the Royal blood who controlled or tried to control the government.

To set the stage it is necessary to go back to the great victory of Poitiers, won by Edward, Prince of Wales, the Black Prince, eldest son of King Edward III. King John II of France and his youngest son, Philip, were captured and John II eventually died in captivity in 1364. His eldest son, Charles V, reigned wisely in France until 1380 and succeeded in keeping England off balance, but when he died, he left a son aged 12 to succeed him. In his will he set up a large Council of Regency, but this did not suit his three brothers at all and the squabbles began.

Meanwhile in England the national hero, the Black Prince, died in 1376 after a long illness, leaving an only son of nine years old. King Edward III was by this time in his dotage and under the thumb of his vulgar mistress, Alice Perrers. John of Gaunt,[1] the Prince's next surviving brother, was in fact ruler of England. Edward III died in 1377, leaving his grandson to succeed him as Richard II at the tender age of 10. A Council of Regency was thereupon set up which excluded all the three uncles of the new King. John of Gaunt, however, soon had Parliament dissolved and a new Parliament elected which was stuffed with his supporters. With the acquiescence of his two brothers, he took over the reins of government.

Before pursuing the course of events in the two countries, it seems advisable to consider the characters of each of the six uncles.

JOHN of GAUNT, Duke of Lancaster, was by far the richest man in England, having married the daughter and ultimate heir of Henry, 1st Duke of Lancaster, Earl of Lancaster, Leicester, Lincoln and Derby. When his elder brother, the Black Prince, contracted the illness which ultimately killed him, he tried unsuccessfully to take his place in the field. Being his father's favorite son, he was by the end of the reign ruling the Kingdom. He was, however, generally held to be implicated in the plundering of public funds by certain officials. In view of his immense wealth, this seems hard to believe, but it increased his unpopularity with the people. He also tried unsuccessfully to introduce Salic Law[2] into England, in order to make himself next heir to his nephew, to the exclusion of Philippa, the only child of his dead elder brother Lionel.[3] On taking over the reins of government, he tried to get the support of the people by standing out against the exactions of Rome and by attacking the Bishops. To this end, he supported John Wycliffe, the leader of the Lollards and the translator of the Bible into English. However, he made a grave tactical error by trying to replace the Lord Mayor of London with a Captain answerable to his friend, Lord Percy, the Marshal of England. This infuriated the citizens of the City who never forgave him.

His character is a mystery. He never actually involved himself in any attempt to seize the throne. This was not from lack of courage, but due probably to scruples which came to the fore when considering desperate measures.

EDMUND of LANGLEY,[4] Duke of York, the next brother, was a nonentity, being "indolent and devoid of all qualities of leadership," to quote Thomas Costain. He had been a fairly successful combatant in the earlier French wars, was amiable and had no ambition whatsoever. He accompanied his brothers on various diplomatic missions to France and was several times entrusted with the Regency when the King left the Kingdom.

THOMAS of WOODSTOCK,[4] Duke of Gloucester, was 15 years younger than John of Gaunt and did not come to the fore until the latter got involved in trying to establish his wife's claim to the Kingdom of Castile (see later). He was a thoroughly unpleasant character, being "full of pride and truculence, quarrelsome, intolerant and fiercely opinionated" (Costain). He was good-looking but lacked the Plantagenet blondess, being "darkly smoldering." He treated his nephew the King with complete lack of respect, hating his effeminacy. He had no time for the King's favorites and disliked his brother John intensely.

Turning to the French uncles, the eldest,

LOUIS, Duke of Anjou, was rapacious, headstrong and vain and was driven by insatiable ambition. He was deprived of the government of the huge southern province of Languedoc by his brother, Charles V, in 1378 for extortion which nearly bankrupted the province. He succeeded in getting himself adopted as her successor by the childless Queen Joanna II of Naples. At this time the Papacy was in Schism. Urban VI, supported by England, gave Naples to Charles, Duke of Durazzo, (a cousin of Queen Joanna), who seized it and strangled the Queen in 1382. Clement VII, the rival Pope who was supported by France, thereupon crowned the Duke of Anjou as King of Naples. Anjou then spent the remaining two years of his life vainly trying to recover the Kingdom with French men and money, and died there while campaigning.

JOHN, Duke of Berry, the next brother, was sensual, debauched, and pleasure-loving. He gave little thought to the affairs of the Kingdom and during his long life (he died aged 78), he acquired an incredible collection of art treasures. To quote Barbara Tuchman (A Distant Mirror), included were: "clocks, coins, enamels, mosaics, marquetry, illuminated books, musical instruments, tapestries, statutes, triptychs, gold vessels and spoons, jeweled crosses and reliquaries, relics and curios, ten of Charlemagne's teeth, a piece of Elijah's mantle, Christ's cup from the Last Supper, drops of the Virgin's milk and enough of her hairs and teeth to distribute as gifts"!

The youngest brother, PHILIP, Duke of Burgundy, was his father's favorite, and was captured with him at the age of 14 at the Battle of Poitiers. Nicknamed "le Hardi" (the Bold) at an early age, he knocked down a steward at the English King's court for serving the English King (who held the French Duchy of Aquitaine) before the French King, saying "How dare you serve the vassal before the liege Lord?" King Edward laughed at his young prisoner and said, "You are truly named the Hardi!"

Philip was attached to his eldest brother, Charles V, but was not as wise or as prudent as the King. His main fault was his "overweening pride," expressed in his apparel and the magnificence of his court in the Netherlands. Because of his prodigality, he was always short of cash. At the age of 18, he was created by his father

Duke of Touraine and when the last of the First House of Burgundian Dukes died, Philip in 1364 gave up Touraine and was created Duke of Burgundy. In 1369 he married the widow of his predecessor. On her father's death in 1383/4, she inherited the rich county of Flanders, being his only surviving child.

The final French uncle was LOUIS the Good, Duke of Bourbon, brother of the King's mother. He was however, to all intents and purposes, a figurehead.

In France, on the death of Charles V in 1380, Burgundy and Berry seized the young King, while Anjou (with the recovery of his Neapolitan "Kingdom" in mind) headed for Paris and made off with the Royal Treasure! He claimed sole authority as the eldest brother and war between the two brothers almost broke out. A compromise was worked out, however, whereby Anjou got the Regency, while the guardianship of the King was given to Burgundy and Bourbon. At the Coronation, relations between Anjou and Burgundy deteriorated almost to the vanishing point. Anjou took the seat next to the King, only to have the much beefier Burgundy force his way in between, claiming that Burgundy was the Premier Peerage of France, thus entitling him to the seat of honor.[5] He won his point but lost his brother.

Later in the same year, the four uncles formed a Council of Regency with Anjou as President. Shortly after, Anjou busied himself with his Neapolitan venture and Berry got the government of Languedoc, where he proceeded to make the previous extortions of Anjou look like child's play. Thus Burgundy became in effect the sole governor of the Kingdom.

For the next few years, Burgundy busied himself with putting down revolts of the burghers in the Netherlands (mainly in the town of Ghent) and trying to preserve peace with England. In view of the wool trade between England (supplying the wool) and Flanders (weaving it), peace was of vital financial importance to him.

Charles VI had a younger brother, Louis, Duke of Touraine then Duke of Orleans. In 1388 when Louis was 17 and the King was 20, Louis persuaded his brother that he was old enough to rule by himself. Much to their surprise, Burgundy and Berry were ousted. The former retired to his Duchy and the latter once more descended on the wretched inhabitants of his government of Languedoc. The King and Orleans, who were both inclined to be bellicose, started to prepare for war and in 1392, despite efforts by Burgundy and Berry to dissuade them, marched in the heat of the August sun into the Duchy of Brittany, in pursuit of the man who had attempted to assassinate the Constable of France. The Duchy, though a part of the Kingdom of France was virtually independent and frequently an ally of England. On the way, the King, whose health had not been good, suddenly went berserk and started to attack those around him, killing several. For the rest of his life, he suffered long spells of insanity. Orleans being too young for the Regency, the uncles took back the government and promptly replaced the King's counsellors with men of their own. From then until Orleans was assassinated in 1407 by Burgundy's son and successor, Burgundy ruled when the King was insane and Orleans, supported by the Queen (the notorious Isabeau of Bavaria, who became his mistress[6]), ruled when the King was sane.

Berry, who in 1381 had married a 12 year old heiress whom he had bought for a large sum from her guardian, took little further interest in national affairs and concentrated on collecting things. He was the last of the uncles to die, surviving until 1416.

John, Duke of Burgundy, the assassin of Orleans in 1407, took over when his father died in 1404, became the lover of the insatiable Queen and virtually ran the country for the next 10 years.

To complete the French story, the English in 1415 won the battle of Agincourt and Henry V (grandson of John of Gaunt) was named heir to France on marrying the daughter of Charles VI and Isabeau. The latter announced that her eldest surviving son, the Dauphin, was not the King's son! Henry V died in 1422, before his father-in-law, leaving a one-year-old son to succeed him. The Dauphin kept up the war from the center of France and on the death of Charles VI in 1442, was crowned King with the aid of Joan of Arc. She and John, Count of Dunois, bastard son of the assassinated Orleans, virtually cleared the English out of France.

We now return to England, where John of Gaunt was in charge (1387). He soon started to concentrate on recovering Castile in right of his second wife,7 using English troops and money. King Pedro the Cruel of Castile had waged a civil war with his bastard brother Henry, Count of Trastamara.8 The Black Prince supported the former, so naturally, the French supported the latter. After several changes of fortune, Henry murdered the captive Pedro with his own hand in 1368 and thereafter ruled Castile. John of Gaunt had in 1372 married the elder of the two almost certainly illegitimate daughters of Pedro.9 For 11 years Gaunt unsuccessfully sought victory but finally had to settle by marrying his daughter to the grandson and eventual successor of the fratricide King Henry. By 1386 John of Gaunt had become bored with both the claim to Castile and the government of England, where he had never succeeded in gaining popularity with the people.

Into the vacuum had moved Thomas of Woodstock, the youngest of the English uncles, seconded by Gaunt's eldest son, Henry of Bolingbroke,4 Earl of Derby. Both were young and belligerent and dreamed of fresh conquests in France. They thus became heads of the War Party. Richard II was under the thumb of his favorite, Robert de Vere, Earl of Oxford. Both the King and his favorite were hated by Thomas of Woodstock who wa in 1385 at last created a Duke (of Gloucester)—an elevation that he felt was long overdue. In 1374 he had married the elder daughter and coheir of Humphrey de Bohun, Earl of Hereford, Essex and Northampton (d. 1372). Thomas grabbed the younger daughter in order to prevent her marrying, so that he would get the whole heritage. He did finally get to lead an expedition to France in 1381, only to hear to his horror that Gaunt had not only signed a truce with France but had also grabbed back the younger de Bohun sister and married her to his son, Bolingbroke. From then on Thomas, Duke of Gloucester, was no longer on speaking terms with John, Duke of Lancaster!

To the disgust of the nobility, Richard II created his favorite, de Vere, Marquess of Dublin10 and then Duke of Ireland.11 This proved to be the last straw and five of the nobility, including Gloucester and Bolingbroke, naming themselves the Lords Appellant, marched on London, defeated Robert de Vere and strode into the King's presence with linked arms. They demanded (1388) that the favorite be banished or else they would depose Richard. He capitulated and was forced to discharge his favorite ministers, who were tried for treason, with most of them being executed. For a year Gloucester ruled the roost but in 1389 Richard recovered the upper hand and ran the country reasonably well for the next eight years. But in 1396 his beloved wife, Anne of Bohemia, died,12 whereupon he began to behave like a tyrant. It was at this point that he magnanimously allowed uncle John of Gaunt to marry as his third wife his mistress of long standing, Katharine Swynford,13 by whom he had already had four children. These were at the same time legitimated.14 Katharine, as Duchess of Lancaster, thereupon became the First Lady of the Land. This rather naturally infuriated Gloucester and his aritocratic wife. Gloucester also feared that four more people had been placed ahead of him in the succession to the throne, even though the letters legitimation specifically excluded them. In 1397 his grievances cause Gloucester to plot to arrest the King and his uncles Lancaster and York and give the throne to the Earl of March who was grandson of Lionel of Antwerp, second son of King Edward III and therefore next in line to Richard II.

The King got wind of this conspiracy and summoned Gloucester to Court. When he refused, the King, with an escort, rode secretly to Gloucester's castle and persuaded him to accompany the King back to London. On the way, he was arrested and taken to a prison in Calais. He broke down and signed a confession that he had "held the King in restraint" in 1386 and had tried to depose him in 1388. He humbly begged for pardon but was impeached. When sent for to stand trial, he was conveniently found to be dead in his prison! Evidence was that he had been smothered and the King was suspected of giving the order.

The Earl of Arundel, another Lord Appellant, although he was a hero of a recent naval victory, was condemned and executed as a co-conspirator. John of Gaunt, in his capacity as High Steward, presided at the trial and announced the sentence. Another co-conspirator, the Earl of Warwick, also a Lord Appellant, pleaded for mercy and was banished to his estates. The remaining two Lords Appellant, Bolingbroke (son of Gaunt) and Mowbray, Earl of Nottingham, were not involved and indeed were in the King's apparent favor. In 1397 they were created Dukes of Hereford and of Norfolk respectively. The time of Richard's revenge on them was not long in coming.

In 1397 the two newly made Dukes were riding together to London. They were no longer friends, Bolingbroke holding that Mowbray had been the King's instrument in doing away with Gloucester and Arundel. On arriving, Bolingbroke went straight to the King and said that Mowbray had asked him to join him in disposing of the King, giving as a reason that they were the only two remaining Lords Appellant and the King had a fishy look in his eye whenever he saw them. Mowbray, confronted with Bolingbroke, called Bolingbroke a liar, gauntlets were thrown and challenges issued. A joust to the death was instituted, with thousands of spectators. Just as the Marshal was about to drop his baton for the commencement of the fight, the King called the whole deal off. He thereupon banished Mowbray for life and Bolingbroke for five years.

Mobray died in exile, while Bolingbroke went to the French court where he became friendly with the King's brother, Orleans. While there, he heard that his father, Gaunt, had died (1399).15 The King first assured Bolingbroke that the Dukedom of Lancaster was his to succeed to, but then suddenly confiscated the huge inheritance. Bolingbroke, having sounded out opinion in England, broke his banishment and landed in England, "only to recover his inheritance," he said. King Richard was, foolishly, in Ireland at this time, leaving his rather stupid uncle, the Duke of York, as Regent in England. The latter promptly handed over London to his nephew Bolingbroke, who captured the returning King, forced him to abdicate and had himself declared King as Henry IV. The unfortunate Richard died some months later in confinement, either of a "hunger strike" or more likely from a blow on the back of the head. His body, exposed in a lead sheath, looked remarkably well nourished for a hunger striker, while the lead sheath conveniently concealed the back of his head!

NOTES

1. He was born in Ghent, which became anglicized to Gant or Gaunt.
2. This was a law of the Salian Franks which precluded women from owning land. In France it banned women from succeeding to the Crown.
3. Lionel of Antwerp, Duke of Clarence, died in 1368. His only child married Edmund Mortimer, Earl of March.
4. These were the birthplaces, which were used as a sort of nickname.
5. Of the six ancient laical peers of France, Normandy was the first. This Dukedom had merged in the Crown, leaving the second, Burgundy, as the Premier Peerage.
6. There is a book, the title of which I forget, which "proves conclusively" that Joan of Arc was the fruit of this union, and thus half-sister of King Charles VII!
7. He bore the impaled arms of Castile and Leon quartered in the dexter and his own personal arms in the sinister. The quartered arms of Castile and Leon were the first example of quartered arms known in heraldry.
8. Henry claimed that his father and mother were in fact married, whereas Pedro was a changeling.
9. Pedro claimed that he had actually married their mother.
10. This was a European title, unknown in England. This 1385 creation was the first in England and gave precedence to the recipient over all Earls.
11. This was the first Ducal creation, other than to a member of the Blood Royal.
12. In 1396, Richard II married, as his second wife, the daughter of Charles VI of France, thus acquiring a father-in-law who was one year younger than he was! Richard, with his uncles Gaunt and Woodstock, went to France to fetch the bride. They met with the King of France, Burgundy and Berry at a ceremony on which just about as much money was spent as at the famous Field of the Cloth of Gold meeting between Henry VIII and Francis I in the 16th century.
13. She was daughter of an obscure knight, Sir Payen Roet and widow of Sir Otes Swynford. Her sister married the poet Chaucer. The granddaughter of Gaunt's and Katharine's eldest son was mother of Henry Tudor, who became King as Henry VII.
14. They were given the name Beaufort, after a lordship of John of Gaunt's.
15. His death was supposed to have been hastened by his son's exile.

"Stot" is a northernism for "ox", hence Stotherd is ox-herd, modified into Stoddard. See Lower's "Patronimica Britannica", an established authority on surnames (LPB). RSED, p. 9, dismisses the derivation as coming from "De la Standard" and implying a noble origin, as fantastic.

ANTHONY STODDARD [559] FOUNDER (Gen. 10)

Born prob. London, Eng. abt. 1615, died Boston, Mass., March 16, 1687 (will made Dec. 29, 1684, proven May 19, 1687); parentage unknown, but prob. the Anthony Stoddard, apprentice, bequeathed a ring in will of John Bancks, citizen and mercer of London, proved Oct. 30, 1630; came to New England abt. 1638/9, possibly with Gov. Winthrop's brother-in-law Emmanuel Downing [1121] whose daughter he later married. Town Records of Boston, Aug. 26, 1639, contain this record: "There is leave grainted to Mr. Anthony Stoddard lynning Draper to become a Townesman"; joined church Sept. 28, 1639; freeman, May 13, 1640; took large interest in civic affairs; one of twenty-nine members admitted to the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Co., 1639; clerk of that organization 1642-48, 3rd Sergt., 1650. Granted 100 acres of land on Mount Woolaston (now in heart of Boston) Nov. 27, 1637; chosen by General Court, Feb. 1641, to trade with Indians. Constable, 1641-44, one of his first duties was to serve warrant issued by Gov. Winthrop to take Francis Hutchinson into custody for freedom of remarks, called "insolence"; Whitman, the historian, relates incident thus:

"He said withal to the Governor—Sir, I have come to observe what you did; that if you should proceed with a brother otherwise than you ought, I might deal with you in a church way. For this insolent behavior he was committed, but being dealt with by the elders and others, he came to see his error, which was, that he did consider that the magistrate ought not to deal with a member of the church before the church had proceeded with him. So, the next Lord's day, in the open assembly, he did freely and very affectionately confess his error and his contempt of authority; and being bound to appear at the next court, he did the like there to the satisfaction of all. Yet for examples sake, he was fined 20 shillings. . . ." (AHAC, Vol. 1, pp. 96/7). He was recorder of Boston, 1650/1; representative in the General Court, 1650 and 1659/60, and for eighteen successive years aft. 1666. On March 9, 1656/7, with Capt. Savage, Mr. Houchin and Mr. Ed. Hutchinson, Sr., was one of committee "to consider the modell of the towne house to bee built" (AHAC, ibid). There must have been something in his presence which caused the very savages to look upon him with awe. Once he was ambushed by redskins between Northampton and Hatfield. A Frenchman directing his gun toward him was warned by an Indian not to fire, as "that was Englishman's God" (RSED).

Son of George Downing [2243] of Ipswich, Co. Suffolk, Eng.

Born and baptized Ipswich, Eng., Aug. 12, 1585, died prob. Eng. 1657. His father was master of the grammar school in Ipswich and had three children. A cousin, Joshua Downing, wealthy merchant and ship-owner of London, sometimes called "Captain", was associated intimately with some of the commanders of King James' Navy; Emmanuel and Joshua maintained close relations during their lives. After his first marriage, Emmanuel lived in Dublin; married abt. 1615, Anne Ware [1122] (abt. 1592-abt. 1622) daughter of Sir James Ware, Kt. [2245] (See Ware Family). Four children:

Generation 10:

- James Downing [560a];
- Mary Downing [560] (Eng. abt. 1615—d. Boston, Mass., June 16, 1647) came to America with Gov. Coddington, 1633; married as his first wife, Anthony Stoddard [559] (See Stoddard Family);
- Sus[illegible] Downing [560b] came to America, 1633, with Gov. Coddington;
- Anne Downing [560c] married as second wife, Gov. Simon Bradstreet [560cm] of Mass.

Emmanuel married 2nd, April 10, 1622, Groton, Suffolk, Eng., Lucy Winthrop [1121m] (b. Jan. 9, 1600) and had three more children, two of whom are of record:

Generation 10:

- Sir George Downing, Bart. [560d] (Aug. 1623-1684) came to America with parents, 1638; educated at Harvard College; returned to Eng., 1645; preacher for brief time; Commissary General of the Forces Parliamentary Army, 1653; married, 1654, Frances Howard [560dm] daughter of Sir William Howard and sister of Earl of Carlisle; member Parliament for Edinburgh, 1654 and 1656; ambassador for Cromwell to the Hague 1657-1660; seceded to Charles II and was re-appointed Ambassador, 1660; betrayed three of Regicides to execution, March 1662. Pepys in his Diary, calls him "an ungrateful villain." Knighted by Charles II, 1660, created Baronet, July 1663. Downing street, official residence of Prime Ministers of Eng.,

laid out after the great fire, 1666, was called after him. His grandson died without issue, 1747, endowed and founded Downing College, Cambridge;

Lucy Downing [560e] married Rev. William Norton [560em] lineal descendant of King Alfred the Great [37, 910, 717, 567].

After his second marriage, Downing returned to Ireland and lived there until 1624. John Winthrop's son Forth was student at Trinity College and seems to have spent large part of his time with his aunt and uncle in Dublin. In 1626 the Downings were living in London in "ffleet streete over agst the Conduit", and resided there several years, being consulted by the Winthrops and acting as bankers for the family. Emmanuel was invited by letter dated July 4, 1629 (written by Issac Johnson, son-in-law of the Earl of Lincoln, one of chief adventurers of the Mass. Bay Co., and the wealthiest of them all) to come with John Winthrop and meet him at Sempringham, Lincolnshire, to consult about the Great Mass. Enterprise. The result of this conference led to Winthrop emigrating to Mass., 1630, and founding of Boston.

Eight years later, at invitation of his brother-in-law, Downing came over to the Colony. He arrived Oct. 1638; admitted to the church at Salem, Nov. 4, 1638; took oath of freedom of colony, March 14, 1639. Two children, Mary and Susan, had preceded him, 1633, with Gov. Coddington. Emmanuel Downing rendered valuable service to Colony through his influence in Eng., and was largely instrumental in saving charter from being withdrawn when attacked, 1633-4, by Laud, Archbishop of Canterbury. He visited Eng., 1642, returning next year to New England, went across again, 1644, and returned, 1645. He prob. died in Eng. Perley in "History of Salem" (PHSM, Vol. 2, p. 27) gives an interesting history of the Downing mansion, an elegant landmark of Salem until torn down, 1753. Emmanuel Downing, Sept. 6, 1638, was granted by the General Court 500 acres for a game preserve, where he could take "wild fowl by way of duck coy." In his will, proved 1657, he granted the tract to his grandson Solomon Stoddard [279] of Boston, who conveyed it to Moses Maverick and Richard Rowland of Marblehead, May 1, 1667 (PHSM, Vol. 2).

HOUSE OF CAPET

The origin of name CAPET remains in doubt. It was patronym of the Kings of France and many of rulers of the most powerful fiefs of that country for nearly nine centuries. The real founder of the House of Capet was Robert the Strong, but the first of the family to whom the name was applied was HUGH CAPET, elected King of the Franks, 987.

Lineage:

WITICHIN [37,910,709,503] according to Aimoin of Saint-German-des-Pres, was a Saxon, but historians question this statement; he had:

ROBERT THE STRONG [18,955,354,751] (slain, 867) received from Charles the Bald, Carlovingian King of the Franks, countships of Anjou and Blois and is sometimes called Duke, as he exercised some military authority in the district between the Seine and the Loire; rector of Abbey of Marmoutiers, 853, and missus, or governor, of counties of Maine, Anjou, Touraine and Corbonnais. In 856 he took part in the revolt of Louis the German against Charles the Bald of France and, 864, participated in Royal Council of Pitres, where he received county of Atun from the French King. Children: Eudes and ROBERT I [9,477,677,375] King of the Franks, killed in battle near Soissons, June 15, 923; came to throne of France during period of disorder and confusion. His first step toward kingship was to receive command of the Carlovingian troops, 888. With this armed support behind him Robert I had no opposition when he set himself up as King; lay abbot of Marmoutiers, St. Martin de Tours and number of other monasteries. He directed many expeditions against the Normans in Province of Loire, and managed to recapture important town of Chartres. In 922 Robert I conducted war against CHARLES THE SIMPLE [18,955,354,819]. Robert I was victorious and at Rheims, June 29, 922, was proclaimed King of the Franks. He married BEATRIX [9,477,677,376] daughter of HERIBERT I [18,955,354,753] Count of Vermandois (See COUNTS OF VERMANDOIS) and had three children: HUGH THE GREAT (below); a daughter married Raoul, Duke of Bourgogne; and Eudes-Henri.

HUGH THE GREAT (also called HUGH LE BLANC) [4,738,838,687] Duke of the Franks, Count of Paris and Orleans (d. June 16 or 17, 956); reign involved a series of wars with sons of Charles the Simple and Otto I, Emperor of Germany; married 936, HEDWIGA [4,738,838,688] (See DUKES OF SAXONY) and had: Otto married a daughter of Giselbert, Duke of Burgundy; and a second son:

HUGH CAPET [2,369,419,343] King of France (938-Oct. 24, 966) succeeded to his father's numerous fiefs, 956, and became one of the most powerful feudatories of France; supported his cousin Lothair in war against Otto II of Germany. When

Lothair's son Louis V died, Hugh Capet was proclaimed King of France, 987; devoted son of the Church; married ADELAIS (or ADELAIDE) [2,369,419,344] daughter of WILLIAM III [4,738,838,689] Duke of Aquitaine (See DUKES OF AQUITAINE) and had: ROBERT II (below); and Hedwige married Rainier or Reginar IV (See COUNTS OF HAINAULT) and married 2nd, Hugh III, Count of Dagsburg.

ROBERT II THE PIOUS [1,184,709,671] (Orleans abt. 970-abt. 1031) won his soubriquet from his humility and charity; good statesman and soldier; married 988, Rosala or Susanna, widow of Arnulf II, Count of Flanders, much older than Robert II and, 989, he repudiated her. His second marriage to Bertha, daughter of Conrad the Peaceful, King of Burgundy or Arles, was dissolved by Gregory V on grounds of too close consanguinity. He married 3rd, 1003, CONSTANCE OF TOULOUSE [1,184,709,672] (See COUNTS OF TOULOUSE) and had five children: Hugh (d. 1025); HENRY I (below); Robert; Eduea; and Adela married Richard III, Duke of Normandy, 2nd, Baldwin V, Count of Flanders.

HENRY I [592,354,835] King of France (May 15, 1008-Aug. 4, 1060) anointed King at Rheims, 1027, at suggestion of his father in order to assure succession. This aroused jealousy of Robert, younger brother of Henry, and led to civil war. Robert was appeased by being given Dukedom of Burgundy, and thus became founder of the great Capetian collateral line which was to rival the Kings of France for three centuries. His reign marks the height of feudalism in France. He warred with William the Conqueror over the latter's lands in Normandy. Henry I married Maud, niece of Emperor Henry III; married 2nd, PRINCESS ANNE OF RUSSIA [592,354,836] daughter of YAROSLAV (IAROSLAF) I [1,184,709,673] Grand Duke of Kiev, and by this marriage had: Philip I succeeded his father as King of France; and a second son:

HUGH MAGNUS [296,177,417] (d. Tarsus in Cilicia, 1102) one of leaders of First Crusade; married ADELE (or ADELAIDE) [296,177,418] Countess of Vermandois and Valois (See COUNTS OF VERMANDOIS) and had an only child:

ELIZABETH (also called ISABEL) [148,088,708] of Vermandois, married ROBERT DE BEAUMONT [148,088,707] (See DE BEAUMONT FAMILY) married 2nd, William de Warenne (See DE WARENNE FAMILY). By her first marriage had a son:

COUNTS OF ANJOU

The region known as Anjou occupied greater part of what is now the Department of Maine-et-Loire, took its name from its inhabitants, called Andes by Julius Caesar and Andecavi by Tacitus, and was divided early into counties by the River Maine. One side belonged to the Carlovingian kings and the other was governed by Robert, the Strong, Duke of France, and his son Eudes, Count of Paris, later King. The portion belonging to the Carlovingians was given by Louis II to Ingelger (below).

DUKES OF SAXONY

Prior to the eighth century there is no history of the Saxons in Germany and no trace of royalty. The country was divided into districts, governed by Counts or Cantonal Judges. They preserved their independence until Charlemagne and were governed by the Franks until middle of ninth century.

Lineage:

Ludolf [37,910,709,511] Duke of East Saxony (d. 866) established first basis of a duchy and thus received his title. Children: Bruno (d. 880) succeeded father and was killed fighting the Normans; and

Otto the Illustrious [18,955,354,755] Duke of Saxony (d. 912) recognized by King Conrad I and on death, 908, of Burkhard, Margrave of Thuringia, obtained authority over that county. Child:

Henry I the Fowler [9,477,677,377] Duke of Saxony and King of Germany (abt. 876-936) became Duke of Saxony on death of father and defended country against the Slavs. By advice of Conrad he became King of Germany, 919, with nominal authority. Charles III of France recognized him as King of East Franks and Lorraine came under his authority, 923. He married Hatburg, daughter of Irwin, Count of Merseburg; married 2nd, 909, Matilda [9,477,677,378] daughter of Thiederich, Saxon Count, reputed descendant of the hero Widukind. Children of Matilda: Otto became Emperor Otto the Great; Henry, Duke of Lorraine and Bavaria; Brune, Archbishop of Cologne; Gerberge married Guelbut, Duke of Lorraine; and Hedwiga [4,738,838,688] married Hugh the Great [4,738,838,687] Duke of the Franks, Count of Paris and Orleans. See House of Capet for continuation of lineage to Frank Alfred Randall [1].

DUKES OF AQUITAINE

Aquitaine was an ancient province of France; first a Roman province, it was ruled later by the Franks and the Merovingian kings. In seventh century a line of independent dukes came into power, but were forced to ask protection of Charles Martel [1,213,142,708,479]. At time of Charles the Bald a treaty, 845, gave districts of Poitou, Saintonge and Angoumois to Raynulfe I, Count of Poitiers, son of Gerard, Count of Poitiers and Auvergne, who then assumed title of Duke of Aquitaine and the duchy remained in hands of the Counts of Poitiers and their descendants until marriage of Eleanor of Aquitaine to Henry II of Eng. transferred the province, then comprising Guyenne and Gascony, to the English crown.

Lineage:

Bernard I [75,821,419,039] Count of Poitiers (d. 844) became Count, 815; was killed in war with Bretons; married Bilichilde [75,821,419,040] daughter of Roricon I [151,642,838,081] Count of Anjou and Mons. Children: Ranulfe; Bernard II (below); Emenon; and Gauzbert.

Bernard II [37,910,709,519] Count of Poitiers and Marquis of Gothia or Septimanie, became Count, 865, following rule of Raynulfe I, first Duke of Aquitaine, and according to some authorities brother of Bernard II, whose child was:

Raynulfe II [18,955,354,759] Duke of Aquitaine and Count of Poitiers (d. 893) poisoned by order of King Charles, the Simple. Raynulfe II married Adelaide [18,955,354,760] sometimes said to be daughter of Louis II, King of France, and had son:

Ebles [9,477,677,379] Duke of Aquitaine (d. 932 or 935) after regaining power which was in hands of his enemies during much of his lifetime; married Aremburge; 2nd, Emiliane; and 3rd, Adele [9,477,677,380] daughter of Edward the Elder the marriage which made him Henry VIII's brother-in-law, had led his armies over the Tweed. Thomas Howard, Earl of Surrey, took a smaller English force north to meet him at Flodden Edge, between Berwick and the Cheviots, and in three hours' ferocious fighting there destroyed the Scots completely. On the evening of 9 September 1513 ten thousand Scots lay dead on Flodden field – most of the aristocracy, a dozen earls, three bishops and King James himself. It took Scotland a quarter of a century to recover. Indeed, if Henry had not wasted so much time jousting in Tournai he could that autumn have seized control of his sister Margaret, her baby son, now James V, and the whole of Scotland. But his eyes were set on Europe. He had plans for another, yet more glorious Continental campaign in 1514. The Pope had secretly promised and shown to Bainbridge in Rome a document confirming sanctified sovereignty for Henry over the whole of France and, indeed, the Crown of France, if Henry could physically win possession of them for himself. The Pope might even, it was hinted, travel to Paris personally to place the French crown on the English King's head.

It was a glittering prospect for a young man not five years on the throne of England. Yet it came to nothing. There were all sorts of circumstantial difficulties, and certain very obvious practical obstacles to the realisation of the dream. But the principal reason why, in 1514, the story of Henry VIII and English history swung in another direction was because of the personal intervention of a man who had been Henry's almoner during the French campaign. Ambitious, vain and greedy, but inordinately hard-working and intelligent, this cleric had organised the complex logistics of keeping the English army fed, healthy and disciplined with remarkable skill and efficiency. He had won Henry's affection with a basic, earthy humour and boisterous tastes that contrasted strangely with his administrative competence, and he had been rewarded with the bishopric of the fine double-ringed and turreted town of Tournai. He was within months to become the effective ruler of Henry VIII's England and, within years, aspired to rule all of Christendom by becoming Pope. Some forty years old, he was the son of a butcher and cattle-dealer of Ipswich, and his name was Thomas Wolsey.

She had no special advantages of birth. The Boleyns were wealthy merchants of London, one of whom had been Lord Mayor. Her mother was sister of Thomas Howard, the Duke of Norfolk, but Anne owed her rise in favour at Court to her own sister Mary, rather than to her parents, for after Bessie Blount had been packed off to the country with one of Wolsey's young protégés, Gilbert Tallboys, it was Mary Boleyn who became Henry's new mistress. When Anne came back from a period as lady-in-waiting to the Queen of France, she found her sister enjoying royal favour to the full. Anne became lady-in-waiting to Queen Catherine, and Sir Thomas Wyatt, the poet, made a play for her. Then Henry Percy, son of the Earl of Northumberland, made more honourable proposals, until Wolsey intervened personally to put an end to the romance. Anne never forgave the Cardinal for his interference, though Wolsey had probably acted at the behest of Henry who had, perhaps, already developed a personal interest in his mistress's dark young sister.

Mary Boleyn, Anne's elder sister. Mary became Henry's mistress in about 1520, and Anne owed much of her swift rise in favour at Court to her sister. Portrait after the style of Holbein.

Whenever it was that Henry first openly declared his feelings for her, Anne Boleyn responded in a most unconventional fashion. She had no wish to follow the path of Elizabeth Blount or her sister, from obscurity to favour and back to obscurity again. If the King wanted her, he must make an honest woman of her. She retired from Court to her father's house at Hever in Kent.

Henry was not a writing man, but suddenly royal messengers began galloping down to Kent, bearing love letters penned painfully by the King's own hand. There could be no more sincere token of the royal affection than the fact that Henry was prepared to sit down and give himself a headache scratching out in Court French lumbering gallantries to this cunning teenage slip of a girl. 'If you would be a true loyal mistress and friend and give yourself body and heart to me, who have been and will be your most loyal servant (if your hardness does not forbid it), I promise you not only that the name will be yours by right, but also that I shall take you alone for my mistress, cast all others out of my thoughts and affections, and serve you only.' To such unambiguous promises, Anne sent back teasing

The most difficult thing to predict in 1530 was what would become of the King's 'Great Matter'. The men who had worked so hard to oust Wolsey and to hound him after his fall were small men, unable to supply from their own ranks a successor as Lord Chancellor. The lynch-pin of the cabal, Thomas Boleyn, Viscount Rochford, had reached his eminence simply because of his daughter's sudden importance. Charles Brandon, Duke of Suffolk, also owed his position to unusual royal favour, while his romantic marriage to Mary, the King's sister, brought him too close to the throne for Henry to trust him with any more power. Thomas Howard, Duke of Norfolk, uncle of Anne Boleyn and Wolsey's greatest enemy, was also already too powerful to be trusted further. There remained Stephen Gardiner, a loyal and hard-working servant of the King, but he was also a cleric, and Henry would never again make a churchman Chancellor. For that position he selected Sir Thomas More, a trained lawyer who was conscientious, eminent and respected. Henry had known More for many years, enjoyed his company and felt for him affection, if not love. More was, of course, an international figure, celebrated with Erasmus and Colet for his humanism and his elegant taste for the New Learning. 'A man of angel's wit,' pronounced the grammarian Robert Whittington, 'I know not his fellow. For where is the man of that gentleness, lowliness and affability? And, as time requireth, a man of marvellous mirth and pastimes, and sometimes of as sad gravity. A man for all seasons.' An apt title, though More, in the last resort, did not adapt precisely as his master required. He was also, unfortunately for Henry, a most devout son of the Church who had the very deepest feelings about the King's proposed divorce. He believed, quite simply, that Henry and Catherine were rightfully joined together in holy matrimony and could never be put asunder. And to that belief he held firm. When Henry first asked him to become his Chancellor, More, who could see what trouble lay ahead, refused. But Henry would not take no for an answer. He angrily insisted that More accept the honour he was being offered. And the King conceded that he would never compel his new Chancellor to act in matters that offended his beliefs. The divorce, he promised, would be prosecuted only by men 'whose consciences could well enough agree therein'. More could 'look first unto

In a rational, balanced mood Henry would have seen these accusations for the concocted balderdash that they were. Cromwell simply was not a fanatic. Whatever his personal sympathies, and there is little evidence that they were ever as radical as Cranmer's, his creed was simply that 'he would believe even as his master the king believed'.

But Henry, in the summer of 1540, was neither rational nor balanced. He had worked himself into a frenzy of anticipation over the arrival of Anne of Cleves – a major reason for the frustration that pole-axed him when the maiden arrived. Now Norfolk was nudging towards the King a sensual, provocative young girl of nineteen, Catherine Howard, the Duke's niece. Like two of her predecessors she had caught Henry's fancy as #6/28 a maid-of-honour to the Queen she was to supplant, but there the resemblance ended, for never was Henry VIII so seduced as by Catherine Howard. She was immodest and voluptuous in a style not even Anne Boleyn had indulged, had certainly enjoyed lovers before ever she came to Court, and was vigorously aided and abetted by her relatives – and by Stephen Gardiner. The Bishop of Winchester, scenting Cromwell's blood in his nostrils, turned pander and encouraged the King and Catherine to make assignations in his house on the South Bank when tongues began to wag about the lovers' frequent journeys to the Norfolk residence.

Catherine's relatives vouched 'for her pure and honest condition' and advised her carefully 'how to behave' and 'in what sort to entertain the king's highness and how often'. But had she been the Scarlet Woman herself it is doubtful whether Henry would have noticed, so smitten was he. In his blind infatuation he even showered his good-will on Cromwell, raising him in April 1540 to the peerage and making him Lord Chamberlain of the Household. But the new Earl of Essex knew how brief his enjoyment of these dignities – and his life – must be. His fatal insistence on the match with Cleves had had as one motive his very reluctance to allow Norfolk, or any other noble, to capture the King through another Anne Boleyn. Now that had happened, and the intended victim of the aristocratic backlash was well aware what to expect. Cromwell's fate was sealed. All in the same summer month, in July 1540, Anne of Cleves was divorced, Catherine and Henry were married, and ungainly 'beloved sister', Anne of Cleves, dancing with her and joining with her as host to the King at a special dinner à trois, a bizarre little gathering which, apparently, gave much pleasure to the participants.

But Catherine was not always so politic. Pampered, thoughtless and licentious, she was embarking on the incontinent path that led her to the block after less than eighteen months of marriage. Her adolescence had been precocious in a society where girls, usually under the strict eye of their parents, had little chance of sexual experience until they were safely married off. Her mother died before she was ten and her father, Lord Edmund Howard, a younger brother of Norfolk's, was a shiftless fellow who abandoned her to the care of her step-grandmother, the Dowager Duchess of Norfolk. This vinegary old matriarch seems to have left Catherine very much to her own devices, and before long the girl was making love with her music teacher behind the altar of the Duchess's chapel and responding with equal generosity to the advances of her handsome and dashing cousin, Francis Dereham. When she became Henry's Queen she invited Dereham to Court to become, of all things, her private secretary. And she also flirted openly with young courtiers like Thomas Paston and Thomas Culpepper junior, two gentlemen of the Privy Chamber. In all these affaires, Catherine was aided and abetted by the matron of her suite, Lady Rochford, a meddling woman who seems to have taken almost pathological pleasure in smuggling lovers into her lady's bedchamber, and who had evidently learnt nothing from the fate of her own husband, George Boleyn, executed for alleged incest with his sister Anne. If a Queen could be condemned for so unsubstantiated an indiscretion, how much the more peril was incurred by nightly adulteries involving comings-and-goings through the royal apartments that were inevitably witnessed by a growing number of servants.

When, in the summer of 1541, Henry embarked on a royal progress to the North – his only royal visit to those parts – Culpepper came too. At every stopping place – Greenwich, Hatfield, Lincoln, Pontefract and York – he, Lady Rochford and Catherine reconnoitred the architecture and location of the back stairs and hidden entrances to the Queen's bedroom. The trio took positive pleasure in the catastrophic risks they were running, revelling in the occasions when Culpepper had had to pick the lock of the Queen's suite or lurk on the backstairs listening for the sound of the guards passing by. As Henry received the homage of his Northern subjects, he was being cuckolded by one of his courtiers with energetic regularity.

That is probably the key to the whole tragedy, for, before her marriage, Catherine had developed appetites which her husband simply could not satisfy. There has never been any evidence that Henry was an especially gifted lover. He certainly could not stand comparison with, say, Charles II. Indeed, the ease with which Anne Boleyn held off his advances, and his preference for wives rather than mistresses, would seem to indicate that his obsession with the procreation of legitimate successors haunted not only his political and religious activities but his sex life as well. He regarded the marriage bed as existing for the begetting of children rather than for voluptuous gymnastics – and, of course, by the time Henry married Catherine Howard, he was hardly the shape for prodigious feats of amorous exertion in any case, whatever his ambitions may or may not have been in that direction. Always a moody, selfish man, Henry was becoming more and more irascible as old age and almost total immobility overtook him – by no means the romantic and persistent style of lover that Catherine's hectic adolescence had taught her to consider the norm. To be chained for life to an obese invalid with legs that oozed pus cannot have been an attractive proposition for the plump, vivacious girl, and she found it hard to pretend that she enjoyed it. She had to act as nursemaid, when, in March 1541, after and perhaps as a result of Henry's efforts at early rising and high living, the royal ulcer closed up as it had done in 1538. The King fell into an agonised black gloom that lasted for weeks.

But when Henry was, finally, told of the indiscretions of his rash young consort, his reaction was surprising. He refused to believe a single word, and, more in amusement than anger, ordered the punishment of the fellow who presumed to concoct such a far-fetched tale. This man, John Lassells, had heard through his sister of Catherine's rompings in the household of the Dowager Duchess and, while Henry was in the North, had laid his information before the three Councillors left in London: Archbishop Cranmer, Thomas Audley the Lord Chancellor, quartered with those of Edward the Confessor.

In more settled times his arrogance might have been ignored. But for Hertford and Dudley, consolidating their power against the day of young Edward's accession, it was the lever they needed to topple Norfolk. The echoes of the White Rose were fatal. On 12 December 1546 both Surrey and his father were arrested and despatched to the Tower. Five weeks later Surrey was beheaded, and on 27 January 1547 the royal assent was given to the execution of Norfolk. He was to die next morning – a Friday.

But the old campaigner survived – just, for the Angel of Death which hovered over London that night swooped down not to the Tower but to St James's Palace where Henry VIII lay breathing feebly. His physicians did not dare tell him that the fever which gripped him was a fatal one, for to prophesy the decease of the monarch was treason by act of Parliament. But Henry had known by Christmas that his end was close. He had drawn up his Will, entrusting his kingdom and his son Edward to a Council of Regency which would, inevitably, be dominated by Hertford and Dudley. When Sir Anthony Denny, the chief gentleman of the Chamber, advised him on that cold Thursday evening 'to prepare himself to death', Henry 'disposed himself more quietly ... to consider his life past'.

Should a priest be sent for? asked Denny. Henry replied that, if he wanted anyone it would be Cranmer but that 'I will first take a little sleep and then, as I feel myself, I will advise upon the matter'. He dozed for an hour or two, then asked for the Archbishop, who arrived about midnight. The King was speechless and nearly unconscious, but he stretched out his hand to this cleric who, after the destruction of the Howards, was the only companion left from the high old days of the early 1530s when England had so proudly blazed a trail for herself in defiance of the world. Cranmer asked his master for some token, some sign that he put his trust in Christ, whereupon Henry 'holding him with his hand, did wring his hand in his as hard as he could'. And so passed away, at about two in the morning on Friday, 28 January 1547, King Henry VIII of England. He was exactly fifty-five years and seven months old and his reign had lasted for thirty-seven years and eight months.

[The Ogle Family Association does not accept this line. More work needs to be done on establishing the parentage of John who settled at Newcastle, DE].

14. SAMUEL OGLE, son of Luke (12) and Marie, was bapt. 25 March 1659 at Berwick on Tweed; M. P. for Bewrwick on Tweed; m. 1st, Elizabeth, widow of Thomas Dawson; 2nd, Ursula, widow of Lord Altham, and dau. of Sir Robert Markham; by his first wife had at least one son (B; C): SAMUEL.

15. THOMAS OGLE, son of John (13) [whose parentage is in doubt], was b. at Newcastle, d. c1672, leaving a will dated 13 July 1734; m. 1st, Mary, dau. of James Crawford, and 2nd, in 1721, Elizabeth Graham and had issue (A:268): JOSEPH.

16. SAMUEL OGLE, son of Samuel (14) of Bousden and his 1st wife Elizabeth (Papenfuse et al, say that Ursula Markham was Samuel's stepmother and his mother was Elizabeth, widow of Thomas Dawson), or his 2nd wife Ursula, dau. of Sir Robert Markham and the widow of Lord Althan (Newman, cites Sir Henry Ogle, Ogle and Botham Families, 1902). Samuel was probably a brother of Luke Ogle of Newcastle, Northumberland, whose will, dated 13 June 1719, and proved in Md on 27 May 1734, left his estate to his brother Samuel. (MWB 21:87). Samuel d. 1752 in Annapolis; was Governor of Maryland, 1732, 173–1742, 1747–1752; m. and had issue (B).

17. JOSEPH OGLE, son of Thomas (15), was b. 1707 in Newcastle Co., DE, d. 1756 in Frederick Co.; married and had issue (A:268; B, II, 619).

THE ORD FAMILY

A Tentative Reconstruction

Any account that is based on "unofficial sources" must be accepted very cautiously. This is an unusual story and must be carefully investigated.

Refs.: A: "Across the Desk," by J. William Hunt, [Cumberland] Sunday Times, 23 Feb 1964.

1. GEORGE III, King of Great Britain, m. Charlotte of Mecklenburg-Strelitz. Their oldest son was (A): GEORGE AUGUSTUS FREDERICK (Late King GEORGE IV).

2. GEORGE AUGUSTUS FREDERICK (Late King GEORGE IV), son of George III (1) and Charlotte of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, was b. 1762, and on 21 Dec 1785 m. (by both Roman Catholic and Anglican rites) Mary Ann Smythe (Weld) (Fitzherbert) at her house in Park Lane, London (A: cites marriage documents deposited in a sealed packet in Coutts Bank, and opened in 1905).

Mary Ann Smythe was born 1756 in Bambridge, Eng., the grand-daughter of Sir John Smythe, Bart. She m. 1st, Edward Weld of Lulworth Castle, Dorset. She m. 2nd, in 1778, Thomas Fitzherbert of Swynnerton Park, Co. Stafford.

George Augustus and Mary Ann (Fitzherbert) were the parents of one son (A: cites unofficial sources and contemporary reports): JAMES.

3. JAMES, son of George Augustus (2) and Mary Ann (Fitzherbert) was adopted by British sea captain Ralph Ord and his wife Mary, and as such was bapt. 9 April 1786 at SS Mary and Michael R. C. Church, Commercial Road, East London).

After the death of Ralph Ord, James Ord was taken by his mother to be raised by her bachelor brother James (surname not given), who brought the young child to the United States where he was raised in Virginia and Maryland. In 1799 James Ord was placed with the Jesuits at Georgetown, and was referred to as "James Ord, son of George IV and his lawful wife, Mrs. Fitzherbert" (A: cites John Gilmary Shea's History of Georgetown College).

James taught at Georgetown, and had taken his First Vows when his uncle died and left him $1000.00. In 1813 he was appointed to a Lieutenancy in the U. S. Army, 36th Infantry. He was sent to Cumberland, MD, where he met and married Rebecca Ruth Cresap on 29 Sep 1814. The couple had three children born to them in Cumberland. One of their children was (A): E. O. C. ORD.

4. E. O. C. ORD, son of James (3) and Rebecca (Cresap) entered West Point where he was a roommate of William Tecumseh Sherman, and later became a noted Civil War General himself. He made the first survey of Los Angeles (A).

OULD, HENRY. of Dartmouth, Devonshire m. Jane (N). They were the parents of at least two sons, who emigrated from London to Georgetown, D.C., in the 1820s (Ould Family Bible, MHS/FCA): ROBERT, b. 11 March 1788 at Dartmouth, a teacher at Swansea, Wales, and HENRY.

6. The only remaining placement, therefore, for Anne Dynewell's mother as a Fulnetby is as a full sister of Godfrey Fulnetby and therefore daughter of John and Jane (Dymoke) Fulnetby. Neatly enough, our a priori logic has led us to a proposed ancestress who would be not only a Fulnetby, but sister-in-law ("related by kindred") to Thomas Goodrich — thus explaining Thynne's original remark in full. Furthermore, this Fulnetby-Goodrich marital tie is the only one known.

Jane (Dymoke) Fulnetby was descended from King Edward I, and as a result, Thomas Bradbury has the following probable royal descent:

APPENDIX: TUCKER

It has long been believed that the family of Robert Tucker, Mrs. Frances Nelson's first husband, came to Virginia from Barbados; the published Barbados records, however, give no clue to their origin. On the other hand, Norma Tucker has suggested (but without proof) that Robert Tucker was the son of Robert Tucker, who was the son of Thomas Tucker/Tooker, who was for a time a servant of (and may have been related to) that Capt. William Tucker (1589-*ca.*1644) who arrived in Jamestown in 1610.[66] Thomas Tucker deposed in 1652 that he was "aged 38 years or thereabouts."[67] On 1 June 1652 he was sworn Under Sheriff of Lower Norfolk County;[68] by December of that year he was dead.[69] He had married Edy Hawkins in the Fall of 1640 (though Cornelius Lloyd tried in vain to prevent that marriage).[70] His second wife was Dorothy, the widow of John Hatton. On 15 Dec. 1653,

> 'This Court takinge into consideracon the many debts which are due out of the Estate of Thomas Tooker deceased, as also lookinge upon the sad condicon of the Orphans of the said Tooker.' The Sheriff is ordered to seize the estate, also what of right belongs to the relict of Tho Tooker, by will of her former husband John Hatton deceased. Further that Mr. John Hill and Jno Smith divide Hatton's estate, according to his will, betw the relict of Tooker and the said Hatton's children. Then the Sheriff to deliver the share belonging to Tooker's widow to Lt Col Cornelius Loyd, admr of said Tooker, and by him sold at Outcry. Loyd to give an account.[71]

"Thomas Tucker ... had two proven sons. In 1653, Thomas Tucker, orphan son of Thomas Tucker, decd., was indentured to William Vascombe for seven years to learn the trade of cooper. Thomas, the younger, died in 1677, leaving his cooper tools to his son Edward. On 15 June 1657 Robert Tucker, son of Thomas Tucker, decd., was apprenticed to William Martin to learn the trade of boatwright."[72]

A ROYAL DESCENT FOR CHRISTOPHER CALTHORPE

OF YORK CO., VA.

By John Anderson Brayton
Winston-Salem, North Carolina

An outline for the ancestry of Christopher Calthorpe of York Co., Va., has been available, theoretically, since the appearance of the 1613 Visitation of Norfolk, which comes to us via "Calthrop" in the Harleian Society Visitation Series,[1] obviously an amalgam of the extant visitations for that county. However, the earlier generations of the Calthorpe family, enshrouded in vague connections to the aristocracy, falter in their accuracy; and even modern treatments of the family rarely extend the family beyond Sir Oliver Calthorpe, who flourished in the mid-fourteenth century. It has also been generally assumed that the alliance of the Calthorpes with the Stapletons, in the early decades of the fifteenth century, assured the immigrant Christopher, some two hundred years later, with an air-tight descent from the latter family, and therefore a royal descent from Edward I. The account in the Harleian Society Visitacion of Norfolk is inaccurate in this respect, particularly in the fifth, sixth and seventh generations behind the settler in York Co., Va. Christopher Calthorpe, as the chart below will show, does not have an un-interrupted descent from the Stapletons via the Calthorpes as it was thought; his connection with the Stapletons is, rather, via the Sheltons and back through a cadet branch of the Calthorpe family. In other words, Christopher Calthorpe of Virginia has two different Calthorpe descents, one royal and one armigerous, a happy instance in which the "judicious" marriage of cousins insured a direct line from the Plantagenets.

Apparently a correct and documented Calthorpe descent had proved a thorny problem, even for Norfolk experts on Calthorpe genealogy. The supurb two volume set of Norfolk visitations,[2] sponsored by the Norfolk Archaeological Society in 1895, did not even taken into consideration an earlier treatment, in the periodical itself, by the Rev. James Lee-Warner,[3] whose chart of descent from the earliest "proved" ancestor, would have resolved the royal connection for Christopher very nicely.

Once again, the information for the correct descent for Christopher Calthorpe was readily available from the LDS Family History Library in Salt Lake City. The only items which had to be obtained in London were the inquisitions post mortem, housed in the Public Record Office in Chancery Lane.

BOOK REVIEWS

County Courthouse Book. 2nd edition. By Elizabeth Petty Bentley. [Baltimore, 1995] 397 p. $34.95 plus $3.50 postage and handling.

The first edition of this work in 1990 was highly praised; this new edition provides even more useful information regarding the holdings of land records, probate records, naturalizations and vital records in each county and independent jurisdiction (including each town in New England), with date of establishment, jurisdiction from which created, address, telephone number, availability of research services and charge for photocopies. Some officials did not respond to questionnaires but there is detailed information concerning nearly 65 percent of the 3,125 county courthouses and 1,577 New England towns and independent Virginia cities throughout this country and all are listed with addresses and telephone numbers. In some instances additional information provided by the respondants is included. Under each state there is also a helpful discussion of the court system, including those which do not keep permanent records and the appellate courts.

Anyone attempting to secure records by mail will make frequent use of this guidebook. It should be in all personal libraries and should be in the reference collections of all public libraries.

Copies can be ordered from Genealogical Publishing Company, 1001 North Calvert St., Baltimore, Md. 21202

The Commander-In-Chief's Guard, Revolutionary War. By Carlos E. Godfrey. [Baltimore, 1995] 392 p. $28.00 plus $3.50 postage and handling.

Originally published in 1904, this work provides a detailed history of the Guard from its organization on 12 March 1776 until its disbandment in 1783 after several reorganizations. Attached to general headquarters and designed for the protection of General George Washington, the personnel were selected from all the colonies. Although many muster and pay rolls have not survived, records have permitted the identification of many of the Guard's members.

Photocopies of two rolls and transcriptions of others are provided. An especially valuable section of this work lists each member with details of his military service during the Revolutionary War, dates of birth and death where available, and information regarding wives and children.

Copies can be ordered from Clearfield Company, 200 East Eager St., Baltimore, Md. 21202.

AN ILLEGITIMATE AND A "LEGITIMATE"

ROYAL DESCENT FOR JOHN FISHER

OF VIRGINIA

By John Anderson Brayton
Winston-Salem, North Carolina

It is lamentable, but true, that New England genealogical research has far outdistanced that of the South in its search for and discovery of the transatlantic roots of its seventeenth century immigrants. The most obvious reason for this is the loss of the earliest Virginia records which might have contained clues concerning the overseas origins of her first inhabitants. Other reasons, having to do with the impoverishment of the South for three quarters of a century after the Civil War, the tendency of Southerners to be somewhat more content with their Revolutionary and Colonial ancestry as an endpoint in research, and the almost total lack of vital records, have all contributed to the difficulty of discovering one's English origins. Yet the seventeenth century records which do exist contain scatterings of clues for the intrepid researcher. Obviously, the higher the social class of the immigrant, the more likely the possibility of finding his or her traces in England, either in wills, visitations, or in the formidible muniments of the Public Record Office in London. For the yeoman immigrant, however, the task is much more difficult. One must hope for the serendipitous discovery of a pertinent parish register for a match.

The Kentish origins of John Fisher of Northampton Co., Va., were elucidated in the latest version of Adventurers of Purse and Person.[1] Most likely his connection with the Epes family, whose connections in England were well known, aided in the discovery of his own provenance from Pluckley, Kent. I discovered John Fisher's royal ancestry rather easily, simply by following out both his maternal and paternal ancestry, during a visit to the Family History Library in Salt Lake City, Utah, seveal years ago. The abundance of ancestral wills both in the Consistory and Archdeaconry Courts of Canterbury and in the P.C.C., as well as carefully documented visitations, for John Fisher's Dering and Brent ancestors, pointed me in the direction of his royal Berkeley ancestry.which follows below. In other words, it was not necessary to make a trip to London to sort through the records there. I was most fortunate in that respect.[2]

Mr. Frederick W. Sawyer, 8 Sachem Drive, Glastonbury, Conn. 06033, a computer scientist, programmed his computer with all the lines in Ancestral Roots, fifth edition, and will bring it up-to-date with this edition as soon as it is in print. He has done the same with the Magna Charta Sureties, third edition, and when the fourth edition is in print will bring that up-to-date as well. He can supply to any one wishing it a print-out for the ancestry of any colonist identified in either book as a compilation of all related lines in both books.

Thomas Southworth had become a Protestant by 1584, for which reason his father, Sir John, a moderate Catholic, threatened to disinherit him. (Letter of Sir Francis Walsingham, 1584, in Peck: Desiderata Curiosa, 1779). The son was living in London in 1584; both father and son had returned to Samlesbury in 1594. 41. EDWARD SOUTHWORTH, youngest son of Thomas and Rosamond (Lister) Southworth, b. London, 1590; living 1602, but d. bef. 1622. (The only support for the connection between generation 41 and 42 is in the coincidence of dates and names. Edward of Leyden may or may not be the same man as Edward of London. The line is inadequately supported at this point.)

26. WILLIAM DE TRACY (222-26), b. aft. 1090, d. shortly aft. 1135, by unknown wife had

27. N.N. de TRACY (called Eva in Devon & Cornwall N&Q xix 194-201 but this is perhaps an error for her niece, Eva or Emma de Tracy, who mar. Warin de Bassingbourne), m. say 1165, Gervase de Courtenay who was probably closely related to REGINALD DE COURTENAY (138-25) as both families gave grants to Tor Abbey and Ford Abbey (the latter abbey having the Countenay family as its chief patron). Gervase de Courtenay and his wife had two identifiable children, Hugh de Courtenay (who had control of his uncle Sir William de Tracy's barony of Bradninch, Devon in the latter part of the 1190s) and William de Tracy (living 1198-1199). This 2nd son William de Tracy is perhaps identical with the William de Tracy who was holding the manor of Bradford Tracy, (East) Sprewoye and Ivedon, Devon in 1242-3. Besides these two sons there may have been a third son, Oliver (No. 28 below) but the evidence does not prove or disprove it. (Book of Fees, pt. II, pp. 759 & 792; George Oliver, Monasticon Dioecesis Exoniensis, pp. 183, 187, 338, 346, 347; Devon & Cornwall N & Q xix 194-201; Calendar of Documents Preserved in France, ed. Round, I: 194-195; Curia Regis Rolls, 12: 440, 13: 137-138, 247, 287, 364-385, 395).

28. OLIVER DE TRACY, possibly s. of the above couple, perhaps identical with the Oliver de Tracy who witnessed a charter dated about 1185-1191, granted by Hugh de Courtenay who is mentioned above. In 1199 Oliver was granted the manor of Bremridge, Devon, which he held of the honour of Barnstaple. In 1242-3 he was also holding the manor of Wollacombe (later called Wollacombe Tracy), Devon which fee he held of the honour of Bradninch, Devon. These two land holdings tend to suggest he was either closely related to the Tracy family who held the honour of Branstaple or else that he was closely related to the Tracy family who held the honour of Bradninch. Circumstantial evidence would lean toward the latter position as Oliver's descendants differenced their Tracy coat of arms with a label of azure which label is a remarkable feature of the Courtenays coat of arms. This heraldic evidence such as it is would suggest that Oliver was likely a son of Gervase de Courtenay and his wife (nee Tracy) above. (Devon & Cornwall N & Q cit. xix 194-201; Calendar of Documents Preserved in France, ed. Round, I: 194-195).

(4) Sir John Stowford, living 1346, a noted judge. (Devon & Cornwall N&Q cit.; Feudal Aids I: 418; Cal. Inq.p.m., Edw. I, IV: 238-239; Pole's Collections towards a Description of Devon, pp. 420-421).

32. SIR JOHN FITZ WARIN (also known as John de Brightley), d. 1407, m. by 12 Nov. 1375 Agnes de Merton, b. 1 Dec. 1359, d. by 29 Nov. 1412, dau. & coh. of Sir Richard de Merton by his first wife, Margaret. (VCH Somerset ibid.; Cal. Inq.p.m. Edw. III, XIII: 242-243, XIV: 175-176; Register of Bishop Edmund Stafford, p. 187; Pole op. cit., pp. 380, 420-421).

33. ISABEL (or Isabella) DE BRIGHTLEY, dau. & h., d. 21 Oct. 1466; m. (1) by 22 Nov. 1408, Robert Cornu, lord of Thornbury, Devon, son of Walter and Constance; m. (2) aft. 1420, John Cobleigh of Brightley in the parish of Chittlehampton, Devon. He m. (2) Joanna (perh. a Pyre) who d. 1480 (Harleian MS 1538 fo. 154b indicates that Isabel de Brightley had no issue by her marriage to Cobleigh but that she gave "all her Inheritance of Brightly unto her husband and his heirs forever."). Isabel did have two sons by her marriage to Robert Cornu, namely Nicholas and William Cornu. At William Cornu's death in 1491, his heir was found to be his distant Cornu cousin John Speccot and no mention is made of any Cobleigh relations. In the time period 1486-1493 a chancery court case was filed which involved William Cornu's heirs John Speccot, Richard Pollard and William Willesford. Again, no Cobleigh is mentioned as being a party to this action. Therefore it would seem that Isabel did in fact have no issue by her Cobleigh marriage. That this is likely can be construed from Pole's statements that after Isabel's Cornu sons died without issue, her third share in the Merton estates passed on to her Stowell cousins. That such a transfer took place underscores that Isabel had issue only by her Cornu marriage. Although Isabel's memorial brass proves she married both Cornu and Cobleigh, Pole states that Cobleigh actually married Isabel's cousin, another Isabel de Brightley who was granddaughter or great-granddaughter of No. 31 above. If true, this could explain how only the Tracy, Stowford and Brightley lands came into the Cobleigh family and not the Merton lands. At the present time, there is no known corroborative evidence for this second Isabel de Brightley's existence except for the fact that the Brightley coat of arms was quartered by later Cobleigh descendants. The quartering would typically represent the marriage of a Cobleigh ancestor with a Brightly heiress; however, in this case, the Brightley arms might have been quartered on the basis of the Cobleighs being "representatives" of the Brightley Family due to the transfer of the Brightley estates into the Cobleigh family. In any case, this line would appear to break at this point until further research sheds more light on this family. If two Isabel de Brightley's did exist, it is obviously possible that both could have married John Cobleigh. If this is the case, it would appear that the second Isabel was John Cobleigh's first wife followed by her cousin, Isabel, widow of Cornu. Earl of Kent 1465, b. 26 Oct. 1416, d. 22 May 1490, son of Sir John Grey, K.C., d. 27 Aug. 1439 and (m. by 24 Feb. 1412/13) Constance, d. Nov. 1437, dau. of John de Holand (son of SIR THOMAS DE HOLAND, K.G. 37. ANNE GREY, m. ca. 1468 as 1st wife, John Grey, 8th Lord Grey of Wilton, d. 3 Apr. 1499, who m. (2) Elizabeth, d. 15 Jan. 1514/5, wid. of Sir Thomas Cokesey, ae. 28+ in 1480, d.s.p. 6 Mar. 1497/8, and dau. of Thomas Vaughn. She m. (3) by 25 Nov. 1501, Sir Edward Stanley, afterwards Lord Mounteagle. John Grey was s. and h. of Sir Reynold Grey, 7th Lord Grey of Wilton, ae. 21+ in 1461, d. 22 Feb. 1493/4, by Thomasine or Tacine, living May 1461, illeg. dau. of JOHN BEAUFORT (1-32), Duke of Somerset, whom he m. by 6 Oct. 1447. (CP VI 180-181; VII 165 note e, 166 note f; XII pt. 1, p. 48 note a). "Gyse of Elmore" (Trans. Bristol & Gloucs. cit. III 59, 70) and 1623 Visitations of Gloucs. (Harleian Soc. Pub. XXI 72) show that JOHN GYSE of Elmore (197-36), b. 1485, d. 20 Dec. 1556; m. bef. 1518 (actually bef. 1512), Tase (Tace, Thomasine), dau. of "Lord Grey of Wilton". In some pedigrees it appears as "Lord Grey of Ruthin" though the former is that which is recorded by "the Heralds' College" (Bristol & Gloucs. cit. III 77). The father of ANNE GREY (No. 37) was a member of the family of Ruthin, which may be the source of the confusion. John Grey of Wilton was the proper age to be Tase's grandfather, and his mother bore the same name. Though there is no positive evidence seen identifying John and Anne as grandparents of Tase, wife of John Gyse, everything fits chronologically and the identification appears most probable.

38. EDMUND GREY, Lord Grey of Wilton, b. ca. 1469, d. 5 May 1511; m. bef. May 1505, Florence Hastings, living 5 May 1511, dau. of Sir Ralph and Anne Hastings. (CP VI 181-182; v.Redlich 199).

Line 234 Original line, published years ago, no longer sound. Read the following discussion.

The ancestry of John Drake has been widely questioned for several reasons, which will not be discussed here. As a result of these questions, it was dropped from the 3rd edition of this work. Since that time, Mrs. J.J. Kicpura, of Soledad, Calif., has published a study, demonstrating that the identification of John Drake's parentage is probably sound, and which was accepted by Donald Lines Jacobus at the time it was published. However, the line as published in the earlier editions, running through Grenville, though probably correct in substance if not in detail, has some inconsistencies in dates. The following line which replaced it in subsequent editions, also contains errors. Those wishing to see the proofs of John Drake's parentage are referred to The American Genealogist, vol. 41, pp. 239-244.

18. WALTER I, Count of Amiens, Valois and the Vexin, d. 992-998; m. Adele, dau., perh. of Fulk I, Count of Anjou. (Walter I was son of Ralph, Count of Valois, which Ralph is either identical with No. 17, or a son of No. 17 with the same name. Turton in error calls Walter I son of Waleran).

19. WALTER II, the White, Count of Amiens, Valois, and the Vexin, d. 1017/1024; m. Adèle. (Perhaps the son of No. 18's brother, Raoul, Count of Valois, d. 940, rather than son of No. 18.)

20. DROGO (DREUX), Count of the Vexin, d. 1035; m. GODGIFU (235-20), d. 1055, dau. of Aethelred II, King of England, and Emma, dau. of Richard I, the Fearless, Duke of Normandy.

From No. 17 down, it appears to be correct (proven by Grierson). The parentage of Raoul No. 17 is in doubt. His mother was a Heiliwich who m. (2) Waleran, Count of Laon. David H. Kelley, from his studies (soon to be published) thinks it more likely that his father was Count Theuderic, prob. of Valois, Vexin, pos. of Amiens, who was of the male line of Childebrand, germanus of Karl Martel. Count Theodoric, the Nibelung, did have a son, Count Radulph or Raoul, prob. of Valois, who could well be this Raoul. If the Heiliwich is daughter of Eberhard of Fruili, then, and only then, is the father of Raoul Hucbold, Count of Ostrevant. The fact that Raoul may have borne the title of Count of Ostrevant is not necessarily significant, since such titles were not necessarily hereditary in this period, and there is no proof that Raoul's mother was Eberhard's daughter.

The identification of the parentage of Eldegard, wife of Raoul, as dau. or niece of Ermenfrid (Erminfroi) rests on Walter's statement that he was his heir. However, it is equally possible that Erminfrid was Raoul's brother.

28. ROBERT BRUCE, Lord of Annandale, d. by 3 May 1294 (G.W.S. Barrow says d. at Lochmaben, Good Friday, 1295); m. in or bef. 1240, Isabel, b. 1226, ae. 13 at mar., living 1264, 2nd dau. of GILBERT DE CLARE (63-28), Earl of Gloucester and Hertford, and his wife Isabel Marshall. (SP II 431-432; IX 55.)

Writtle July 1243, d. shortly bef. 4 Apr. 1304; m. as 2nd husb., MARJORIE (121C-30), d. 1292, bef. 27 Oct., wid. of Adam de Kilconquhar, eldest dau. and h. of NEIL (121C-29), Earl of Carrick; he m. 30. ROBERT BRUCE, Lord of Annandale, s. and h. by Marjorie; b. prob. at Turnberry Castle, 11 Jul. 1274; succeeded as Earl of Carrick 9 Nov. 1292; crowned King of Scots (as Robert I) at Scone, 25 Mar. 1306, d. at Cardross, near Dumbarton, 7 Jun. 1329; m. ca. 1295 (1) Isabel (also called Matilda), d. bef. 1302, dau. of Donald, 6th Earl of Mar; m. (2) 1302, Elizabeth, d. 26 Oct. 1327, dau. of RICHARD DE BURGH (75-31), Earl of Ulster. (Donald, 6th Earl of Mar was son of William, Earl of Mar, d. ca. 1281, by his 1st wife, Elizabeth, d. 1267, daughter of WILLIAM COMYN (121A-26), Earl of Buchan, j.u., by his 2nd wife, Countess of Buchan). Donald, Earl of Mar, was knighted 1270, living 25 Jul. 1297, d. shortly thereafter. His wife, and mother of Isabel, was Helen, widow of Malcolm, 7th Earl of Fife, d. 1266, and daughter of LLEWELLYN, Prince of Wales (176-7). Helen's first husband must have been an old man when she married him, for he succeeded his uncle in 1228. When he died, his son and heir was Colban, the 8th Earl, then under age, who had been knighted in his teens in 1264. Colban was married in his nonage, for when he died in 1270, when he could not have been more than 24, his heir was his son Duncan, aged 8. (Mr. Balfour Paul believes Colban's wife Alice was one of the three daughters and co-heirs of Sir Alan Durward. If so, his issue shared with the Soulis family the descent from Alexander II of Scotland. However, since the line of his heir Duncan has died out, remaining descendants of this line would stem from younger children of Colban and Alice, if there were any.) The Helen, daughter of Llewellyn, who was successively the wife of Malcolm and of Donald, and mother of the children of both, appears clearly the daughter of LLEWELLYN AP IORWERTH (176-7) but must not be confused with his daughter HELEN (236-8), successively the wife of John le Scot, Earl of Chester, and of Robert de Quincy, whose mother was Princess JOAN (27-27). (Refs.: Mar; CP VIII 401-402 (William, 5th Earl), 402-403 (Donald, 6th Earl); SP V 576-578; Burke's Peerage (1953) p. 1397; Fife: CP V 373; SP IV 8-10).

31. MARJORIE BRUCE, daughter by (1) and eventual heiress, b. bef. 1297; m. 1315, WALTER (75A-32), b. 1292, d. 9 Apr. 1327, 6th High Steward of Scotland. (His (1) wife is said by Douglas to have been Alice, dau. Sir John Erskine by whom a dau. Jean, m. to Hugh, Earl of Ross. No proof either of marriage or daughter, almost certainly wrong.) Q: If a boombox has auto-reverse, will the tape automatically switch sides continuously until I manually stop it?

A: The boombox must have the continuous play option, not just auto reverse. If the setting on the unit is this "↻", it will play side A, then side B, then stop. If the unit has this setting :"🔁", it will be continuous play. FYI...this setting "⇄", will play one side, then stop.

Q: I lost, or broke, my speakers. Can I order new ones?

A: It is not possible to order the entire speaker, although replacement parts are available for repair.

Q: What is the switch on the back of the boombox for that is labeled ISS?

A: It stands for Interference Suppress Switch. It has three positions: 1,2,3. Set the switch to the position that gives the least amount of noise during AM recording.

Q: Can I hookup an external antenna to my boombox?

A: No boombox has an external antenna jack.

INFORMATION PRODUCTS

Q:	Where can I locate dealers for the Pro-Dictation equipment? The electronics dealers in my area don't seem to have this type of equipment.
A:	There are specialty dealers for this type of equipment so it is best to check the dealers listed with Pro Dictation by their names.
Q:	I recorded a tape onto 1 tape recorder and it won't playback on my Sony. Why?
A:	Check the recording system of the Sony and compare it to the recording system of the other unit. They must be identical in order for the Sony to playback the tape. NOTE: Library of Congress tapes are recorded on a 4 track, 4 channel system. In order to play these tapes back on a Sony recorder, the system must also be a 4 track, 4 channel unit.

TAPE RECORDERS

Q:	I just purchased a Pressman that is supposed to have VOR (voice operated recording), but I cannot get it to work. Is it broken?
A:	Ask the customer: "Is the problem that the tape won't start moving or that it won't stop moving?" - If the answer is that it won't start, inform the customer that, in addition to setting the VOR switch on, it is also necessary to press "Record". - If the answer is that it won't stop, explain to the customer that the unit does need to detect 10-15 seconds of silence before it will go into record/pause. If sensitivity is set to High, the unit may pick up fans or blowers or other voices in the room so do test it in the low position.
Q:	What microphone can I use with my Tape Recorder?
A:	It is best to check the specification for the recorder and see what impedance microphone is needed. Then, find out what kind of atmosphere they will be recording in.

WALKMAN

Q: The cassette door will not close. I just purchased the unit.

A: These units are shipped with a black foam securely mounted on the heads to protect them. Remove this and the door should close.

Q: Is there an A/C adapter available for the Sports Walkman models?

A: No, they do not have a DC IN jack which is necessary to connect an adapter.

Q: What is the sensitivity/selectivity of a Walkman?

A: As a general rule, it is not a tested or listed specification. FYI: Check the service manual, if it is not listed then it is not a listed specification.

Q: What is the function of the Local/Distant (DX) switch?

A: This switch adjusts the sensitivity of the tuner for the optimum reception of either local or distant radio stations.

Q: Can a recording Walkman record from its own built-in tuner, if it has one?

A: Yes, it can.

Q: Sony used to sell Walkmans with wired remote controls. Do any of the current walkmans offer this feature?

A: The only current walkman that has this feature is the WMEX1.

~~GENERAL PRODUCT INFORMATION~~

- ~~The operating temperatures of audio products is: 32 degrees farenheit - 104 degrees farenheit.~~

- ~~I am trying to use rechargeable alkaline batteries (not Sony) with my unit and it is not operating correctly. Why?~~

~~- Most rechargeable batteries are 1.25volts per battery. Standard AA alkaline batteries are 1.5volts per battery. For instance, if a unit requires 3v as the power requirement and customer uses rechargeable AA batteries, the voltage equals 2.5 volts. The unit requires 3V therefore it does not provide enough voltage to effectively power the unit.~~
